ADVERTISEMENT CHARGES.

6d. for the first eighteen words. One Halfpenny for each word over eighteen. Name and address to be reckoned. MINIMUM, 18 words 6d.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny. No single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Sixpence.

Headlines or Footlines, 1/-, 1/6 2/-, 2/6, according to size.

The rate for displayed advertisements is 7/6 per inch. Rates for a series on application.

ADVERTISEMENTS UNACCOMPANIED BY CORRECT REMITTANCE WILL NOT BE INSERTED.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL. The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements must in all cases bear the bona-fide name and address of the advertiser, and no advertisement will be inserted if addressed to a receiving office, or similar place of call.

Small prepaid advertisements of a general nature and not connected in any way with the Cage Bird Trade are inserted at the rate of 3d. per word throughout. Minimum 12 words 6d.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

REPEATING ADVERTISEMENTS.

Owing to the number of announcements received we cannot guarantee to repeat advertisements unless the previous issue, Page and Column are stated by the advertiser.

NOTICE TO BIRD PURCHASERS.

It is advisable that all newly-purchased birds, especially foreign birds, be kept isolated from established stock for a week or ten days, until by their condition they establish the fact that they are thoroughly healthy.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

RULES.

- 1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.
- 2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.
- 3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.
- 4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned of the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

We are confident our medicines give you satisfaction. Ditchfield's Medicines have been used for over six years by most leading fanciers, and are used at the London Zoo. They are genuine remedies, which can be given with perfect confidence to all classes of cage birds. Ditchfield's Tonic Drops are a guaranteed cure for soft moult, not singing, going light, egg binding, feather plucking, and inflammation of the bowels. In 7d. and (treble size) 1s. 1d. bottles; special size 2s. This medicine is invaluable for young birds just getting on hard seed. For bronchitis, wheezing, and hoarseness, get Ditchfield's Special Lung Tonic, also in 7d. and 1s. 1d. bottles. The grandest medicine ever introduced for chest and lung affections in cage birds. For cases of constitutional weakness and debility get Ditchfield's famous Revivo. There is nothing to equal it for giving new life and vigour to the birds. Revivo is invaluable as pick-me-up for birds before and after showing; sold in 7d. and 1s. 1d. bottles. As an advertisement, we will send two 7d. bottles of any of the above medicines for 1s., or two 1s. 1d. bottles for 1s. 9d. All medicines are sent post paid, per return, at our risk. Also two valuable seed recipes, how to feed Linnets and Rollers for song, given free to all purchasers of our medicines. Perfect satisfaction guaranteed.—Frank Ditchfield, Bird Specialist, Oldham. THE Song Thrush and Blackbird.—Full directions how to keep these favourite songsters in the best possible condition; together with directions for hand-rearing the young and the selection of show birds, will be found in "Nutshell No. 4," 2d. post free from "Cage Birds," 154 Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from agents (list published frequently).

SOFTBILL keepers, take expert advice before proceeding to buy and keep the larger species of insectivorous birds. You will then have no trouble in keeping your pets in the best of health. This advice is offered in "Nutshell No. 26," by H. J. Fulljames. It is a wonderful little work, dealing with most varieties in a truly interesting and instructive manner. Foods and their preparation, and the various styles of cages also receive full attention. Can you breed Mealworms? This booklet tells you how. Post free, 2d., from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Look at our list of agents; call on the nearest and get it for 2d.

HARRY ALLEN, THE ORIGINAL LINNET KING Notice! I guarantee all my Rollers I send out cocks. They are bred by myself and there is no finer blood in England, and they are taught under my well-known champion Canary. All cocks guaranteed, 4/6; a few singing nice, 5/6; travelling cages 3d. extra; these Rollers won all before them last year. Try one. Linnets, to mount out sure winners for the bench, 2/- each; Linnets from the same place as the champion Linnets of the world, 1/- and 1/6; a few singing grand, 2/-; these are without doubt the largest and best singing Linnets in the world. I had the pleasure of being at Cawood on the 13th of July (this week), near Selby, where I caught the champion Linnets of the world. I was speaking to the farmer there and he cordially invited me to his house. I have sung many hundred songs in the village, and I am very well respected there. Cawood for the Linnets is like Germany for the Roller, and they are the largest Linnets I can find, without a doubt, in England. Linnets taught by the world's champion, with new cage, and my book of secrets, 3/6; a few with quality notes, right for catching or contest singing, will sing any where, 4/6; they call them musical boxes, and they win all before them. Larks, singing nice and low, 1/- and 1/6; they are good birds. A few that will make champions, 2/-; beautiful Lark cages, fit for any room, 1/6; beautiful Linnets cages, 1/6 each, 16/- a dozen. Real yellow cock Greenfinches, like paint, sure winners for the bench, 1/6; young yellow cocks, will mount out winners, 1/- each; cock Brambles, 1/6; Redpolls, 1/6 pair; best Birdlime in England, 1/8 lb., 10d. half, 5d. quarter; if you can find better throw mine away and I will return your money. Best Linnets and Canary whistle in England, 6d. My book of secrets is the best book published of its kind; it tells you the proper rules of contest singing and how they sing at contests, and the proper time for each pair of birds to sing; how much you pay entrance fee, and how much the worthy host should add to it; how to make Linnets sing at one another with their wings down, and how to mount them and how to train them for contest singing; how to make Nightingales, Larks, Thrushes, and Blackbirds sing with full loud voice in five days; how to save the Siberian Goldfinch and the English Peartree Goldfinch from dying. It tells you the proper food for each bird; it has saved thousands of birds their lives. This book will be sent by return for 1/-. Thanking you all for your kind patronage: Harry Allen, The British Bird Champion, City Aviaries, 40, Beckett-st., Leeds. (1707)

Club Reports.

GLASGOW (East End) O.A.

Meeting, Mr. D. Harris chair. For the F.F. show we had a very good entry. Mr. A. Stewart, sen., judged. SCOTCH FANCY: 1, 4, McRoberts. PLAINHEADS: 1, Burnett; 2, 3, 4, 5, Scott. BORD.: 1, 4, Feott; 2, 5, Wilson, 3, Percy. After Secretary had read over winners, Mr. Harris moved a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Stewart for his voluntary services.—D. Burnett, Sec.

SOUTH BIRMINGHAM O.S.

Meeting at headquarters, Marlboro Hotel, July 8, a splendid gathering dealt with a full agenda; Mr. Willmott chair. In submitting the first young bird show report, the chairman said he was pleased that it had proved a splendid success. Although the entries had fallen to 50 birds, no loss had been entailed, and he hoped that members would make an effort to send a record lot for the July show on the 18th. Mr. Baker is to judge and more splendid specials have been presented; entries close afternoon of the show. Presentation of prizes and specials brought the meeting to a close; the lecture which had been arranged for the evening has been postponed until August meeting.—J. Sheppard, Sec.

CLAPHAM C.B.A.

Meeting July 7. See report of that the patronage of the Foreign Bird Exhibitors' League had been secured. Schedule of the young bird show on or about July 22 was arranged. The chairman, Mr. Vale, then gave the meeting a lecture on British Buntings. He described the habits, etc., of the five British Buntings, also their show points, and gave hints on colour feeding and exhibiting them; his remarks were very interesting. At the conclusion of his address Mr. Vale acted as final judge in a judging competition; only three birds were benched, a Corn, a Grl, and a Reed, and although the majority of the members fancied the Corn, Mr. Vale placed them: Reed 1st, Corn 2nd, Grl 3rd, and Mr. Whitton was the only fancier to get full points. Mr. Vale then explained why he had so placed the birds, and easily satisfied the members as to the wisdom of his judging.—A. R. Coo.

ATTERCLIFFE C.B.S.

Meeting July 9, Mr. Havenhand presiding. Mr. J. R. Webster should have given us a paper on colour-feeding, but we greatly regret he was unable to attend. We had, however, several questions raised which provided some very interesting discussion. We also managed to raise enough cash to secure a handsome cup; this was brought to the meeting for our inspection. We have now five cups, one each for members Yorks, members Nor., novice Yorks, novice Nor., and British. There is also a movement on foot, which I have no doubt will be successful, to secure another for the best bird, irrespective of section, exhibited at the annual show, to be won three times in succession or four times in all before becoming the member's own property. Surely, with six cups to compete for members will make our annual show a record one. I consider that never in the history of the society has the outlook been more promising for a successful future.—E. Johnson, Sec.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

Meeting July 13, Church Institute, Paddington-street, Mr. W. H. Shepherd chair, and 25 members present. Correspondence was read and dealt with. Mr. G. E. Robertson and Mrs. Howick were nominated for membership. The hon. sec. announced points gained for various cups at young bird show: Champ. Nor. Cup, F. J. Martin, 29; Border, A. H. Hobden, 49; teapot for champion, ladies, Mrs. Thyme, 74; teapot novice ladies, Mrs. Holden, 14; Mrs. Weston's points cup, Mr. Beavington, 8; Wynn points cup, Mr. T. Sayer, 12. Prize-money and specials won were presented. Votes of thanks were unanimously passed to donors of specials; to the stewards for assisting, and to our worthy secretary, to whom the success of the show is due. Mr. Murgford addressed the meeting on "Off the Beaten Track". His remarks were the result of his own practical experience, and not theory. He objected to the modern earthenware nest-pans as unhealthy, and preferred wire or wood, and perforated wire bottoms, so as to ensure plenty of ventilation through the nest; he believed in green-food for getting birds into condition, as seed and egg-food made them too fat. This season he had reared young birds entirely on green-food, not giving them egg-food until seven weeks old. Ventilation of the bird-room was very essential; as a staple food grass seed was preferable to canary seed; it was not advisable to take more than two nests from each pair; from two pairs of Borders this season he had 24 young birds, and they were again sitting on nine eggs between them. From the remarks of Messrs. Curtis, E. J. Martin, F. Knight, Cobb, Sanders, Shepherd, and Wynn, who joined in the discussion, they preferred to be "on" rather than "off" the beaten track. Votes of thanks to Mr. Murgford and the chairman closed the meeting.—Fred. Thynne, Asslt. Hon. Sec.

BRADFORD NATIONAL SHOW COMMITTEE.

Our last meeting (Mr. H. H. Towers chair) was very well attended, and much enthusiasm was shown, which speaks well for the success of our next annual show, December 4 and 5. The Roller classification was discussed and a vote of thanks accorded to the Wakefield Roller Society for so generously changing their date, and so leaving a clear field for this great charity show. This action on the part of Wakefield is appreciated very highly, and I take this opportunity of publicly thanking them for their splendid help on behalf of charity. I believe they are the oldest provincial Roller Society, and have held this date for a considerable time, and are worthy of all the thanks we can give them. The Foreign Bird classification was dealt with, and after reading a communication from Mr. A. Silver, Secretary of the F.B.E.L., it was decided to provide seven classes by dividing class 120 of last year to read as follows: (1) Common and Green Avadavats, St. Helena, Grey, Orange-checked and Zebra Waxbills, Corlon Blues, Laxevader, Common, African, Fire and Zebra Finches; (2) Grey and White Javes, Bengalese, Black-headed, White-headed, Two-coloured. Three-coloured, Striated, Sharp-tailed, Spice, Magpie and Bronze Mannikins, Silver-bills, Singing Finches, Common Cuckoos, Ribbun and Saffron Finches, Orange Napoleon and Red-billed Yellowlegs. The League very generously guaranteed these two classes against loss, and the League's diploma will be granted in case of any new species appearing. Points for the four Sectional Cups will count at this exhibition. It gave us great pleasure to welcome Mr. C. R. Bullen, of Bromley, Kent. He was at our last show, and assured us of the desire of many fanciers in the South to visit our show if only the railway company would put on an excursion. He took upon himself to call a meeting of Southern fanciers to formulate some scheme, and expressed his willingness to do all in his power to persuade Southern fanciers to exhibit, and thus return the compliment to the Yorkshire men, pointing out that the Crystal Palace and L.C.B.A. shows would lose much of their charm if it were not for the Yorkshire exhibits and exhibitors. Any one interested in the excursion should watch C&B Banns for notice, or communicate with Mr. C. R. Bullen, 43, Walpole-rd., Bromley, Kent.—S. Midgley, Hon. Sec.

NORTHERN BORDER & S.F.C.C.

Meeting July 1. W. P. Smith chair. Letter read from Morpeth refusing the patronage after having asked for it. Decided that Cranlington show be awarded the patronage. Notice of motion was given by Mr. Copie re counting of points for judges at patronage shows. Table show next meeting. Judges: Champions, Mr. A. Afflett and Mr. W. P. Smith; Novice, Mr. A. Montgomery.—M. C. Potts.

DERWENT VALLEY C.B.S.

Meeting July 4, Co-operative Hall, Low Westwood, Mr. Wm. Marsh chair. Very moderate attendance of members. Schedule for annual show drawn up. Members elected: Mr. J. R. Carr, Chopwell; Mr. D. Page, Lintz Colliery and Mr. R. South, Blackhall Mill. Will all members try and attend our next meeting to consider a fund for purchasing a cup. Subs. now due.—Jameson and Johnson, Secretaries.

FARNWORTH C.B.S.

F.F. show, July 11, Church House. About 50 birds were staged. Judge, Mr. J. Hopkins, Bolton. YORKS. YELL.: 1, 2, 3, Spilly. BUFF: 1, 2, 3, Spilly. NOZ. YELL.: 1, Dawson; 2, c. Lawton; 3, vhe, he, Mitchell. BUFF: 1, 3, Dawson; 2, vhe, c. Mitchell; he, Parlington. ROLLERS: CL.: 1, 2, Kenwright. ROLLERS, A.O.V.: 1, 2, 3, Chappell; vhe, c. Horsfield; he, Hodgkinson. CAN. A.O.V.: 1, Parlington. GOLDF.: 1, 2, Mullineux. LINNET: 1, vhe, he, Hulme; 2, Parlington; 3, Chappell; c. Mullineux. FOR.: 1, Hodgkinson.—W. Dawson, Sec.

PORTH & RHONDDA VALLEY C.B.S.

Meeting headquarters, July 11, not a big attendance, after the show. I hope all members will attend next meeting, July 25, as prize money will be paid. Also a club will be proposed for a trip to the next Palace Show. Our show of July 9 was, on the whole, not a bad success considering it was our first show; entries were not large, but good birds were exhibited. Mr. Caestre judged. Mr. T. James was very successful, securing several 1st prizes, also special for best Canary, and special for best bird in show. Mr. Stone and Robinson took special best and second best Brit. Mr. Baker's Yorks. were fine, winning second best Canary in show, and some 1st. Other successful exhibitors were Hillman, Legg, Evans, Smart, Jones, etc. I hope to see a good meeting July 25, and that every member will try to push the society on by telling everyone about it, attending every meeting, and giving all encouragement to the novices. I am sure by pulling together we can make the Porth and Rhondda Valley C.B.S. one of the best societies in Wales.—J. S. Jones, Sec. (Please write on one side only of each sheet of paper.—Editor.)

The Shows.

SOUTHPORT & DISTRICT C.B.S.

P.F. show, July 4, when a nice lot of birds far d the judge, Mr. W. E. Kay. There was a shortage of entries compared with former years, many birds only having had an indifferent breeding season. 8 nice nice Norwich were on view. Yorks class were more numerous; many were dropping into moult, but Mr. Kay handled them very painstakingly and efficiently.

RUNCORN B.B.A.

Young show, July 4, headquarters, Old Cocoa Rooms. Nearly 50 were on view; quality was very good and competition was very keen. In the champ. section Mr. Boots staged a grand team of Yorks, and Mr. Hayes must be congratulated on his team of Norwich. Mr. Joe. Gray sent a fine team of Crests and C.B., which won him the cup. The Novice section were all there for type and quality. Mr. Bates showed a fine team of Norwich, which only lost him the cup by one point. The Yorks class had some good birds. Mr. Hampson (Penketh) judged, and his awards were well received.

PORTH AND RHONDDA VALLEY.

P.F. Show, Tramway's Restaurant, July 9. Mr. T. L. Castree, Mountain Ash, judged, and his awards were well received. Mr. Jones is a most obliging secretary, and although the society is composed chiefly of young blood, the future promises well when we find such experienced fanciers as Messrs. Legg, Challenger, and several other experienced fanciers taking an active part in the welfare of the society. The Plain-head shown by Mr. T. James is a very promising bird, and well deserved its place as best Canary, also best bird in show. Mr. Hillman's cap and wing marked yell. Yorks. 2nd best Canary in show, is a very stylish bird, and should be heard of again. Mr. Stone's Bullie also only wants careful handling to hold its own in good company, and well-deserved the spl. for best British, the same owner's Linnet, spl. for 2nd best Brit., with a little more size would be a topper. The officers and committee are a hardworking and painstaking lot of fanciers of the right grit. At the close the successful exhibitors were presented with medals, etc., and a very fair attendance of visitors made up a neat and pleasant evening.

SHEFFIELD O.S.

Annual N.F. show July 4 in the Foresters' Hall, an excellent hall for such a function. Entries totalled 148, which, under the general cry, "Poor breeding season!" we consider good. Yorks made a capital section, Norwich, if anything, proving still better. British and foreign were grand. Mr. E. C. Job, the popular and energetic secretary, once again proved his worth, and along with Mr. R. Colton of Mule fame, who knows exactly what is required, they used the reins magnificently. Mr. G. Fletcher was here, there and everywhere, always doing the right thing at the right time. Two great assets are Mr. T. Dawn and Dr. Craig, chairman and treasurer. Mr. J. A. T. Woodall acts as vice-chairman in a most able manner, and gives of their part well as stewards. Special winners: Yorks. Spencer; Nor., Lawton; Crest, Richardson; Hardbill, Walsh; Softbill, Bearder; For., Fletcher. Mr. J. C. Barnes judged, and his awards were well received.

Twitterings.

We hear from Mr. G. Beardall, sec., that the show of the Alfreton C.B.S. is fixed for Oct. 31.

Fanciers and friends are invited to the ramble of the Queensbury C.B.S. on July 19; see under Club Notices.

Will all members of the Lancaster and Dist. C.B.S. assemble at the New Town Hall on July 19, at 2 p.m., to take part in a ramble, writes Mr. J. Bostock, hon. sec.

The Derby C.B.S. will hold a first feather show at Belper on July 25. Arrangements have been made to go by brake, and a favourable day is looked forward to by the members.

CAGE BIRDS has always been my favourite, and I can well understand its great popularity, and wish it all the success it undoubtedly deserves. W. J. Smith (Strat-ham).

The North Yorkshire and South Durham Federation of C.B.S. will hold an amalgamated F.F. show on July 25 in the club room, "Little Regent" Inn, Regent Street, Stockton-on-Tees. The sec. is Mr. J. W. Lowes, 17, Canning Street, Stockton.

Our next evening show of all sections will be held in St. John's Hall, Leeland Road, West Ealing, July 18, at 7.50, writes Mr. Freebrey, hon. asst. sec. Ealing and Hanwell F.S. All cups to be competed for in each section. Fanciers always welcome.

On opening my CAGE BIRDS this week I was more than pleased to see the picture of my Hawfinch. I have at present about 20 birds in an outside aviary; Siskins, Bramble, Chaffinch, Linnets, and Bullfinch. I wish CAGE BIRDS every success.—J. Lovell (Mus-selburgh).

The Committee of the Rochdale and Dis- affiliated C.B. societies have arranged for Mr. Harrison, of Altrincham, to give a lecture at the Littleburgh Coffee-house on July 21, at 8, on "Seeds, their Uses and Abuses." It is open to anyone to come, writes Mr. Wm. Adams, sec., and we should be pleased to see a good attendance.

Will members of the Northern Norwich P.H. Club, writes Mr. F. W. Laidlow, secretary, please remember we are closing our subscription fund towards cups and are holding a special meeting on July 22nd to select same, also to consider a suggestion of alteration of rules re champion trophy. Meetings in future will be held at Pillar's Cafe, Pink Lane.

The Green Canary Association, writes Mr. Fred Handley, hon. sec., 25, Coventry Road, Wavertree, Liverpool, has decided to continue this novice scheme this year. A cup has been given by the champions, and already several pounds have been given to further the same. Reports from time to time will be given; see CAGE BIRDS. Rules will be ready at next meeting, July 23. Radius this year is open. Secretaries please communicate.

First Feather Shows.

IMPORTANT OFFER.

We have decided again this year to accept advertisements of First Feather (young bird) shows at the reduced charge of 3s. 6d. per single column inch (2s. the half inch). And we will present a special prize of a bound volume of "Bird World," illustrated magazine, or two handsome specially mounted plates, to all societies spending not less than 10s. 6d. in advertising their Young Bird Show in our columns.

Secretaries taking advantage of this offer should state very clearly in their advertisements the date, time, and place of the show. These particulars put before our readers will, without doubt, result in a much greater attendance at these early fixtures, and the making of new members, while the "gate-money" (where a charge is made) will benefit, and the sale of catalogues, too. This special cheap rate, of course, only applies to First Feather shows.

Secretaries should note that we can print at very favourable rates, show schedules, posters in colours, and ornamental prize-cards. Send for samples and prices.

As will be seen from the advt. and Review of Schedule, the King's Lynn F. and F.S. is providing 12 classes for cage birds at its show on Bank Holiday, Aug. 3.

I thank you very much for the honour you have done me in putting my even-marked yellow Border on the front page of CAGE BIRDS. It was bred by myself. This is only my second year in the Fancy with my even-marked, and in 1913-4 I had four 1sts, two 3rds, one 2nd, and one 4th, along with CAGE BIRDS Diploma and Cash Special 10s. I have derived great benefit from your two books "Our Canaries" and Canary Breeding for Beginners"; I wish CAGE BIRDS every success.—J. C. Johnston (Midlothian).

Mr. Geo. Broome, sec. of Abertillery C.B.S., writes that through taking up business in another town, he is compelled to give up the secretaryship of the society, and the office is taken on by Mr. H. H. Mortimer, Oaklands, top of Crook Hill, Cwmtillery, to whom all communications in future must be addressed. Also Mr. Parfitt has had to give up the office of chairman, which is now filled by the vicar, Mr. J. Probert. Though these two members are removing from the town it is encouraging to know that they are still continuing to be members.

The principal feature of the "Avicultural Magazine" for July, the journal of the Avicultural Society, is an interesting article by Mr. J. H. Symonds on the Yellow Wagtail, illustrated with five excellent reproductions of photographs by the author. Major Horsburgh communicates some notes by Mr. W. W. Cooke on the Cinnamon Teal. Miss Lilian Medland sends an account of her tame Greater Spotted Woodpecker which has just died at the age of 6½ years. Miss Medland thinks this is a record for the species, but we seem to remember that our friend Mr. Dewhurst, of Kensington, had one of a considerably longer period. Mr. G. A. Henmann writes of birds of New South Wales which he has caught and kept. Dr. Butler continues his "Thirty two Years of Aviculture," and Mr. H. D. Astley sends a further account of his birds.

Fanciers on Holiday.

Mr. W. A. Lott writes that Mr. David Bentley, the well-known British bird fancier, and one of his old chums gave him a call on Monday last on their way North, after having enjoyed a fortnight's ramble on the Continent. Mr. Bentley, who was looking bronzed, hale, and hearty, told of the soaring of the Eagle in the Alps, the Chaffinches in galore that came in at the hotel windows for the fallen crumbs, and, of course, the ever present Sparrow. As far as his experience goes, he has never heard so many Blackcaps singing, or seen so many Golden Crested Wrens in the immediate neighbourhood of the hotels.

A Loss to the Fancy.

I am sorry to inform you, writes Mr. J. C. Wilmot, that Mr. Arthur Keech, of Fenlake, Bedford, has been obliged to part with most of his birds. As a Norwich enthusiast and exhibitor Mr. Keech has been very successful, having won numerous prizes, including the silver challenge cup (two years in succession), in connection with the Bedford Society, and also the cup for the best young Norwich bred by a member. He has taken this step on account of accepting a position of great responsibility, which will necessitate his being from home a great deal. We are hoping, however, that he will still keep in touch with the Fancy, which lays very near to his heart.

FIRST FEATHER SHOWS.

The following First Feather Shows have been arranged; we shall be glad to be notified of any omissions: July 18, Irvine and Dis. C.B.S., London and Counties A.C.B., Abertillery C.B.S., Windhill C.B.S., Beamish C.B.S., Birtley C.B.S., South Birmingham O.S., Halifax O.S., Coventry Godiva C.B.S., Stoke-on-Trent C.B.A., Openhaw Gorton C.B.S., Chester-le-Street, Doncaster C.B.S., Wolverhampton C.B.S., Ealing and Hanwell F.S., City of Bradford O.S., Shipley O.S., Grangemouth C.B.S., Leyton C.B.A.; July 22, Clapham C.B.A., Windsor C.B.A.; July 23, Bedford and Beds. C.B.S.; July 25, South Shields C.B.S., Falkirk Good Intent, Derby C.B.S., Altrincham C.B.S., N. Yorks. and S. Durham Federation of C.B.S., Idle C.B.S., Clay Cross C.B.S.; July 30, Upper Rhondda C.B.S.; Aug. 1, Pelton Fell C.B.S., Sunderland C.B.A., Edinburgh C.B.S.; Aug. 4, Darvel C.B.S.; Aug. 8, Larkhall C.B.A.; Aug. 29, Dumfries C.B.S.

THE PATRONAGE OF SPECIALIST CLUBS.

Societies desiring the patronage of the following clubs should apply to the respective secs., stating date of show, number of classes and judges: Northern Border and S.F.C.C., M. C. Potts, 52, Falmouth Road, Newcastle; Midland Counties Y.C.C., W. Wells, Helmsdale, Erdington, Birmingham; Norwich P.H.C., F. Cunliffe, 19, Lark Street, Burnley; Northern C.C., Geo. Dobson, 103, James Street, Blydenon-Tyne; Yorkshire and Lancashire British Bird and M.C., T. H. Inman, Thornbury, Bradford; Northern Y.C.C., R. Tindale, 6, Gill Street, Benwell, Newcastle-on-Tyne; Green Canary Association, F. Handley, 23, Coventry Road, Wavertree, Liverpool; National Green-marked Y.C.C., J. Chambers, 22, St. Ann's Mount, Burley Hill, Leeds; Fife and Kinross Plainhead Club, A. Dickson, 57, Adams Terrace, Kc'ty; closing date, August 1, Yorks. C.C. of Scotland, W. Priest, 6, Orchard Street, Partick; closing date August 6. Scottish P.H. Club, E. Barron, 119, Montrose Street, Glasgow. Crested C.C., J. Tyson, 169, Sloane Street, S.W. Northern Lizard Club, G. O. Davidson, 6, Eden Vale, Sunderland.

Never Too Late to Lay.

A Mr. N. Dalby-Munton states that he has kept a Grey Parrot in a cage for twenty years, and a few days ago she laid an egg for the first time.

Where Societies are Wanted.

I have been a subscriber to and reader of CAGE BIRDS, both in Malta and Alderney, for over two years, and am sorry to say there is no C.B. Society in either of these islands.—Staff-Sergt. W. Colquhoun.

Starling's Long Journey.

A Starling ringed by H. W. Bowling, assistant keeper, Skerries Lighthouse, Holyhead, North Wales, at the lighthouse on Oct. 23, 1912, has just been reported to the Aberdeen University Bird Migration Society from Svendborg, Denmark.

London's One-legged Pigeon.

Three weeks ago one of the Pigeons at the Bank of England had one of its legs broken by a taxicab, the bone being severed. The bird was taken home to Brixton by the driver, and tended till the stump healed, when it was released. Two days later it turned up at its old haunts at the Bank, where it may now be seen cheerfully hopping on one leg.

Under the Area Steps.

I was very much surprised, writes "E. A." in the "Edinburgh Evening News," to find a Robin having a nest of young birds at this time of the year under the door steps in the area, as they generally stay in the woods in the summer. It seems to be very tame, for the door bell wire just pulls right across its head, and it never moves when you pull. It seems to have done all the work itself, as I have never seen the male bird at all, and I watched it building the nest some time ago.

Brechin Fanciers Doing Well.

I thank you very much for the honour you have done me in putting the sketch of my clear buff cock on front page of CAGE BIRDS. He is the best bird I have ever bred; he has been three seasons on the show bench, has won over twenty firsts, and has been three times at the Palace. I have seven young from him now, and the hen down again. I have had a grand season, having 140 young birds, and a lot to hatch this week. The most of the fanciers in Brechin are doing well, and when the show season comes round they expect to keep up the name of the ancient city. I wish your valuable paper every success.—John Craig, Brechin.

The Peacock's Adventure.

A caretaker, cleaning the offices of Messrs. Bourdas and Co., in Craven Terrace, Lancaster Gate, London, about six o'clock on the morning of July 9th, went into the basement for water. When he returned he was amazed to see a Peacock with a magnificent tail standing on one of the writing tables. The bird was placed in the area, where crowds of children gathered to watch it, and was eventually claimed by a keeper from Kensington Gardens, who tucked it under his arm with the tail in front and carried it away. It must have walked some distance through the gardens, crossed the busy Bayswater Road, and walked up Lancaster Gate and Craven Street.

PRIZES FOR NEW VARIETIES

And the Breeding of British and Foreign Birds.

TO encourage all readers to try what they can do in the matter of evolving new varieties of the Canary, of producing new kinds of Mules and Hybrids, and breaking fresh ground in the breeding of British and Foreign birds in cages and aviaries, CAGE BIRDS is adopting the scheme outlined below, which we hope will commend itself to, and stimulate into action, every bird-keeper who can possibly join in it.

CAGE BIRDS suitable and valuable mementoes are offered to any breeder who succeeds in—

- (1) Producing and rearing any new variety of Canary, bred in either cage or aviary.
- (2) Producing and rearing any new variety of Mule or Hybrid, bred in either cage or aviary.
- (3) Breeding and rearing in a cage any species of British or Foreign bird which has not previously been so bred.
- (4) Breeding and rearing in an aviary any species of British or Foreign bird which has not previously been so bred.

The mementoes we offer take two forms:

- (1) A large suitably-inscribed silver mcca in case.
- (2) A hand-coloured certificate, suitable for framing.

The choice will rest with the successful breeder. An additional prize of £1 1s. Cash will be given to the breeder of the Rarest British Scibill in a Cage.

This is presented by Mrs. E. Warren Vernon.

FRENCH BIRD MASSACRES.

Where the Swallows Go: Vineyards Lose £1,600,000.

In his report on the trade of Bordeaux for last year Mr. Consul Rowley has some interesting comments on the results of the wholesale massacre of birds in the South of France. He states that the loss suffered by the vineyards in the Department of the Gironde through insect pests in 1913, estimated at £1,600,000, is largely, if not entirely, attributable to the absence of bird life. In seven years the annual loss has doubled.

A law has been passed providing for the rigorous protection of insect-feeding birds at all seasons, but, unfortunately, the chasse aux petits oiseaux is one of the most cherished Sunday and feast day recreations of the people, and any restrictions placed thereon would be much resented.

The Consul adds: "The trapping of wild birds for the market is a most lucrative trade. Trapped birds are sold in the market on sticks supporting a dozen of these small creatures, plucked and ready to roast, and are worth from 10d. to 1s. per stick during the fighting season and from 2s. 4d. to 2s. 9d. per stick out of fighting season. They are much sought after and appreciated as an article of diet.

The following figures, obtained from a reliable source, furnish an idea of the wholesale massacres of these insect-feeding birds which take place yearly throughout the departments of the South of France: 28,000 kilos (say 28 tons) of small birds transported by train in baskets from various stations in the South of France during one season; 3,000,000 Swallows, 20,000 Robins, etc., caught and sold in one season. As for Larks, it is impossible to state any definite figure, but it is a common occurrence for a bird trapper to catch as many as 200 to 300 dozen in one night during fighting season.

"If it be allowed that one Swallow is able to catch say 50 eudemis or cochylys moths in one evening, not an excessive consumption for these birds, and as it is known that the insect descendants of two moths born in the spring of one year will at the vintage of the next year, say in a space of eighteen months, number as many as 3,000,000, it is inconceivable that the cause of the incalculable damage done to crops is not more fully appreciated."

—"Daily Telegraph."

Moorhens Join in the Craze.

It is perhaps not generally known that Moorhens are great fighters. I have sometimes seen two male birds fighting fiercely, almost on their backs, in the water, keeping afloat with rapid swimming strokes of their wings and slashing furiously at each other with their sharp-clawed feet. A Moorhen blind in one eye is not uncommon, and its injury is possibly the result of a similar encounter. That bird would probably never attempt to fight again, for, once totally blinded, it could only meet with a sad and certain fate—death by starvation.—F. Woolward ("Country Life").

Cash Prizes for the Best Written Accounts.

In addition we shall award to each sender of the best written essay in each of Sections 1, 2, and 4,

A Cash Prize of £1 1s.

that is, three guineas in all. In Section 3 the sender of the best written essay will receive presented by Mr. W. E. Teschemaker.

Rule 6, of course, applies also to the awarding of all essay prizes, to compete for which the essays must be of not less than 1,000 words in length. In fact the explicitness and helpfulness of the details given will be the chief features taken into consideration when making the awards.

The Governing Conditions.

- (1) Claims for CAGE BIRDS Breeders' Prizes must be lodged with Editor within ten days of the young birds being hatched; and an independent witness skilled with birds shall certify to having seen the young in the nest or with the parents.
- (2) All young, excepting only Canaries and Mules and Hybrids, must be entirely reared by their own parents, hand-rearing not being permissible.
- (3) To qualify for CAGE BIRDS Breeders' Prizes the young of Hardbills and Softbills must live for at least three weeks after leaving the nest, young Quails six weeks, and the young Canaries or young Mules or Hybrids until after their first moult. By "young" is meant one, or more.
- (4) Our definition of a cage is: A cage to come within the scope of Section 3 must be one that can be easily moved, without being taken to pieces, from place to place by one person.
- (5) Written accounts of the breeding, for publication in CAGE BIRDS, must be lodged with us within four weeks (28 days) from the date the young birds leave the nest.
- (6) The decision of the Editor of CAGE BIRDS will be final and binding in every case and he shall have the right to call together a committee of expert bird-keepers if need be to assist him in coming to the said decision.

The Care of Young Canaries and Hybrids.

Hints by that Well-known Judge and Artist, Mr. H. Norman

MANY a fancier one meets at this time of the year will, when you enquire about his success, unfold to you his little "Tale of Woe." It is very seldom indeed, however, that we hear of anyone "throwing up the sponge" because he has happened to hit upon a bad time. He may feel disheartened for the time being, but when the shows come round and he rubs shoulders with his fellow fanciers, and hears talk of present successes and future hopes, the fever asserts itself once more and he is keenly anxious for another try.

The fancier I somehow always feel the greatest sympathy for is not the man who has failed to get young, but the one who gets young, yet fails to bring them to maturity, and a few words upon the subject of the "Care of Young" may not be out of place just now. Among the many thousands of readers of CAGE BIRDS, too, there must be many who never get quite in touch with their fellow fanciers, and therefore miss many opportunities of gaining a little knowledge in friendly chat, and it is to these I particularly address my notes.

A very successful season frequently has its drawback, because in nine cases out of ten it means overcrowding of the stock. In the spring a fancier is so liable to put up an extra pair or two, leaving practically no room for the produce, that the time comes round when he is at his wit's end to know what to do with his young stock. Undoubtedly overcrowding is a great evil; it means fighting and quarrelling for food, and extra dirt in the cages and on the perches. It appears to me that it is far better to have temporary cages and risk being crowded by these, rather than have a crowding of the birds.

The Separation of the Sexes.

Grocers' boxes can quickly be knocked into shape and will do duty for a time to house the commonest of the stock in, thus allowing more space for the most promising of the batch. These, if kept separately, can receive a little extra attention, and be occasionally run into a show cage.

Even before the moult it always appears to me advisable to separate the sexes. Young cock Canaries are like young cock chickens—greedy and quarrelsome. Consequently the gentler sex get little of the good things going, and in many cases are not allowed to get near the egg-pan until the little lords of Canarydom have had their fill and appropriated all the choicest tit-bits. When the sexes are separated they certainly agree better in this way, and live upon more equal terms, and so any less robust birds are frequently able to "catch up" their stronger brothers and sisters. Even with this separation we sometimes find one particular bird a nuisance to his fellows; and for such birds there is nothing but complete isolation.

A Failing of the Young.

Cleanliness in growing stock is absolutely necessary to success. Like all young things, birds are wasteful, and egg-food and bread and milk in a sour state lying about the cage floor cannot be conducive to a healthy existence. When three or four are housed in one cage it should be cleaned out every other day and the perches be scrubbed at least twice a week. If possible have a duplicate batch of perches always on hand clean. The same remark applies to egg-pans; the least quantity of sour food left in the corner of a pan quickly contaminates the whole.

If one does not happen to possess a duplicate set of pans the difficulty can be got over in the following manner. Upon entering the bird-room remove all the egg-pans, placing them in a basin (or pail) of water. Leave them while attending to the seed and water, etc. By that time they will have soaked almost clean, and a good rinse round will complete the job; then if they are laid upon the table upside-down they require very little wiping.

Fanciers will now be putting their stock upon colour-food. I would advise the novices to start early enough. There is no secret in colour-feeding, and yet we seldom see the birds moulted out by novices and amateurs so rich in colour as they should be. In many cases this is caused by not starting in good time; one does not want to wait until the moult has commenced before giving the food. If so, the chances are that the colour will be badly distributed or it will be pale throughout. Then, again, the health and condition of a bird influences the colour immensely, and I am inclined to think this is the reason why birds moulted in large flights do so well. Exercise is conducive to health, and if health means colour, then give all the room possible to young stock, so as to keep them fit, for moulting is a great strain upon the system, and one does not want to stunt the growth of the birds. To do well they should never receive a check from the time they leave the nest until maturity.

Variety is Advisable.

Most fanciers are content to give their birds plain canary seed during the moult, but it does not appear to me that a little mixed seed twice a week is at all out of place. The birds should live well during this period and a varied diet should assist development. When colour-feeding is once started it should be continued regularly and kept at the same strength; we feel then that we have done our best even if all the stock do not moult out successfully.

Insect pests are particularly plentiful during the latter half of the summer months, and fanciers should now wage constant war against the red mite. Fresh air and clean cages will assist immensely, but we must not rest content at that. With a small painter's brush all cracks and crevices of the cages should be painted once or twice a week with a strong insect destroyer, such as paraffin or turpentine, with a few drops of creosote in it. This will not only kill the live mite: it will also prevent them multiplying so rapidly. It seems almost impossible to clear red mite quite out when they have once established themselves, but there is no reason why they should not be kept well within bounds.

The bath is essential to growing stock, and during the moult assists greatly in the development of the new feathers. When watching broods of young ones in the hedge-grows it has always appeared to me that the babies have feathered much more rapidly in showery weather than when it has been hot and dry; if I am right in this it is a proof that dampness is conducive to feather development, consequently a frequent use of the bath should be a regular proceeding in our rooms during the moulting period. Care, of course, must be taken to give it on suitable days only, and also to give it early in the morning and not after mid-day. Birds are particularly susceptible to catch cold: no matter how healthy our stock may be, it is scarcely so robust as the birds in the fields and woods.

CLEAR-CAP SILVER LIZARD.

First prize at the Horticultural Hall Show for Mr. A. Bradley (Glossop).

The Value of Bread and Milk

Young birds, like other young things, are liable to ailments, and of these the disease known as "Going Light" is the most fatal. The birds appear to be getting along famously until some morning we notice one or two of the batch looking a little bit "thick." Upon catching these we find they are almost wasted to a skeleton—devoid of flesh and with very prominent breast-bone. It is difficult to assign a cause or reason for this wasting sickness, although one naturally thinks that the food has something to do with it, and that it does not possess sufficient heating or flesh-forming material. Some fanciers give the weather as the harmful agent, and affirm that some peculiar climatic condition affects the well-doing of the stock, pointing out that in some seasons the disease is much more prevalent than at others. However that may be, it is certainly very fatal when young birds are seriously affected.

As soon as one finds his stock afflicted with this complaint, he should lose no time in isolating the ailing birds. Let them have bread soaked in hot milk, with a few drops of cod liver oil emulsion upon it. In bad cases this should be given night and morning, with fairly strong plain egg food at mid-day. Be liberal with maw seed and give them boiled water to drink. It requires care and perseverance to null them round, but it can be done, and should be if the owner values his stock. Bread and milk undoubtedly forms one of the finest foods for sick birds that we have, and has saved the lives of thousands, especially young ones.

KEEPING AND BREEDING FOREIGN SEED-EATERS IN CAGES.

THERE is no necessity to abide by any hard and fast rules as to the species of birds to keep. As a guide we may assume that where one species of a genus has been bred in a cage there is a reasonable prospect of the other species doing so, and in like manner the species of other genera having similar habits and demeanour.

The original heading to these articles was "Keeping and breeding foreign Finches in cages," but I am going strictly to confine myself to Finches, and shall include in the various groups one or two species of Lovebirds, and instead of confining myself to cheaply obtainable species, I can be a little more comprehensive by grouping the species under approximate values, using as far as possible present market values. In the lists given the asterisks indicate that the species have already either bred or nested and laid eggs in a cage.

Birds of Modest Price.

Species of a not greater value than 5s. per pair: *Cordon Bleus, *Bengalese, *Avadavats, Gold-breasted Waxbills, *Grey Java Sparrows, Black-headed Mannikins, Spice Birds, Sharp-tailed Finches, White-headed Mannikins, *Bib Finches, *Bronze Mannikins, *Cut-throats, *Grey Singing-Finches, *Orange-cheek Waxbills, *Silverbills, *Firefinches, Grey Waxbills, Green Singing-Finches, Striated Finches, Tri-coloured Mannikins, Madagascar Lovebirds, etc.

Species of a not greater value than 10s. per pair:—*Zebra Finches, *White Java Sparrows, Lavender Finches, *St. Helena Waxbills, *Magpie Mannikins, Green Avadavats, *Saffron Finches, etc.

Species of a not greater value than 15s. per pair:—St. Helena Seed-eaters, Sulphur Seed-eaters, Yellow-rumped Serins, etc.

Species of a not greater value than 20s. per pair:—Yellow-rumped Mannikins (Finches), *Long-tailed and *Masked Grass-Finches; Pectoral, Chestnut-breasted, *Ruficanda, *Red-headed, *Olive and *Cuba Finches; *Yellow-rumped Serins, *Alario Finch, *Cape Canaries, *Parson Finches, Rufous-backed Mannikins, *Blue-winged Lovebirds, etc.

Species of a not greater value than 30s. per pair:—*Black-headed Gouldian Finches, *Crimson Finches, Scaly-fronted Finches, *Melba Finches, *Cherry Finches, *Diamond Sparrows, *Bichenos Finches, etc.

Species of a greater value than 30s. per pair:—*Hooded Siskins, *Black-headed Siskins, Sydney Waxbill, *Violet-eared Waxbill, *Black-faced Waxbill, *Dufresne's Finches, *Red-headed Gouldian Finches, *Peach-faced Lovebirds, etc.

The values given are as near as one can estimate under present conditions; birds that were quite cheap not long ago are rather costly to-day, and vice versa. With one exception (Peach-faced Lovebirds) no species named has a greater value than 60s. per pair.

I have not aimed at making the list inclusive, naming the more general run of Finches: As they appear on the market many others will suggest themselves to the alert fancier, and their adaptability may be gauged by their affinity or otherwise to other species which have bred or attempted to breed in cages.

The Field for Hybrid-breeders.

Hybridisation appeals to many, and forms a most interesting pursuit. Many foreign species will inter-breed if not too distantly related, and many again will readily cross with the domestic Canary, especially of the Serins and Siskins. The following have all crossed with the domestic Canary:—Alario Finch, American Siskin, Black-head Siskin, Green Singing-Finch, Cape Canary (Grey-necked Serin), Grey Singing-Finch, Hooded Siskin, Mexican Rose-Finch, Purple Finch, Saffron Finch, St. Helena Seed-eater, Serin Finch, and Sulphury Seed-eaters, etc.

The Serin family is a large one, and almost any of its members would sooner or later give a successful result.

Species which have already successfully crossed with the Bengalese:—Sharp-tailed Finch, Spice Finch, Striated Finch, Bib Finch, Silverbill, Tri-coloured Mannikin, Parson Finch, etc.

Have successfully crossed with the Silverbill:—Sharp-tailed Finch, Bengalese, Spice Finch, Striated Finch, Bib Finch, Zebra Finch, Grey Waxbill, Java Sparrow, Sydney Waxbill, White-headed Mannikin, etc.

Of the Waxbills, which have been crossed, may be named the Grey and St. Helena; Golden-breasted and Avadavat; Orange-cheeked and Grey; St. Helena and Cordon Bleu; Gold-bread and Firefinch; Grey and Crimson-rumped; Orange-cheeked and St. Helena; St. Helena and Sydney, etc.

Of Grassfinches the Cherry and Masked; Long-tailed and Masked; Parson and Long-tailed; Crimson and Ruficanda; Zebra Finch and Silverbill; Zebra Finch and Bichenos; Zebra Finch and Bengalese; Red-headed Finch and Cut-throat; Crimson and Long-tailed; also several species of Parrot Finches, etc.

Of the Mannikins, the following have all been successfully crossed, many of them also with the parentage reversed, omitting those already grouped above:—Bib-Bronze, Spice-Bronze, Sharp-tailed-Striated, Striated-Spice, Bronze-Magpie, Bronze-Rufous-backed, White-headed-Cut-throat, etc.

The popular Zebra Finch has crossed with the Bronze Mannikin, Bichenos, Silverbill, Bengalese, Diamond Sparrow, St. Helena, Waxbill, etc.

A Goodly List.

The following interesting crosses, some of which are between British and Foreign species, have all been successfully inter-bred:—Alario-Grey Singing Finch; Green Singing Finch-Alario; Green Singing Finch-Goldfinch; Green-Grey Singing Finch; Green Singing Finch-Siskin; Grey Singing Finch-Linnet; Saffron-Pelzel's Saffron Finch; Saffron Finch-St. Helena Seed-eater; Serin-Green Singing Finch; Greenfinch-Japanese Greenfinch; Siskin-Siskin Siskin; St. Helena Seed-eater-Grey Singing Finch; Black-headed Siskin-Cape Canary; Siskin-St. Helena Seed-eater; Siskin-Sulphury Seed-eater; Black-headed Siskin-Siskin; Totta Siskin-Siskin, etc.

The above will sufficiently indicate what species the hybridiser may pair together with reasonable prospect of a successful result. I may say en passant that nearly all the Mannikin group, as well as all the Serin-tribe, are quite ready to cross, when a mate of their own kind is not available. Almost any species of the Mannikin group may be paired up with the Bengalese or Silverbill with a very reasonable prospect of an interesting hybrid.

Even at the cost of repetition I would say that Crimson Finches, Bichenos Finches, Long-tailed Grassfinches, Cordon Bleus, Orange-cheeked Waxbills, Firefinches, Zebra Finches, Cut-throats, Bronze Mannikins, Budgerigars, Blue-winged Lovebirds, Cockateils, etc., have all been successfully bred in cages; therefore, the task before the would-be breeder is not a hopeless one, though his (or her) patience may be sadly tried before it be attained.

In my next instalment I shall deal with food and general treatment, and then go on to recount one or two representative successes.

As a preface to the following remarks the writer wishes to state that he attaches great importance to the points where his treatment differs from more orthodox procedure in bird-breeding. To command success the point primarily to aim at is as near an imitation of natural conditions as it is possible to realise. This goes without saying; but how is it done? Get the birds into the best of health and keep them there is another way of stating the original problem.

The subject may be divided into three problems, to be faced separately: First diet, second exercise, and third environment. All these three factors bear directly on the bird's health.

The Problems Considered.

Dealing with these problems in the order named we first treat of diet. During the spring and summer, that is during the breeding season and up to the first moult for the young, the food of the wild birds consists almost entirely of unripe, i.e., green seeds, and a certain proportion of live insects. Now, dry canary seeds do not come near this natural regimen in any respect.

In the first place green seeds (not green leaves, mind you) contain the essential oils of the plant and have a fairly high fat percentage; canary and red (summer) rape do not offer a high fat percentage taken together. In the second place green seeds contain nearly one-half their weight of water; that is, water of formation—water combined with the other constituents of the seed.

To provide a diet of green seeds is impossible for most of us, so a substitute must be found. Green food, such as lettuce, cress, dandelion leaves, and groundsel, and we will include apple, may be freely obtained, and provides us with a food stuff of high water content but deficient in fats and oils. Certain seeds, such as hemp, red rape, maw, linseed, and niger all contain large percentages of fat and oil. Here then is material to work upon.

HOW TO BREED GOLDFINCHES INDOORS.

By L. J. HIBBERT (Thornton Heath).

Let at least one-half the total weight of food supplied to the birds be green food and the rest a mixture of seeds as specified later, and we have a non-animal diet that is as near to Nature as the town-dweller can hope to get.

The Substitute for Insects.

Now for the insectile portion of the food. All living insects, like the green seeds, have a high water content, dried insects, then, are no use. Here let me point out that dried insects plus water is a very different thing from the digestive point of view to the same insects in a freshly-killed state with the water actually forming part of their tissues. The best substitute for the insects is egg.

It is not desirable for several reasons to give egg raw, but hard-boiled egg will do well. Crumble the yolk and white together, as both parts are equally valuable as a food.

A Warning About the Egg.

Now a word of warning. Don't spoil your egg and your chances of success by mixing biscuit with the egg. The birds get enough starch (flour) in the canary seed of their mixture, and the over-cooked stuff in biscuits is doubly bad for them.

To summarise: The diet should consist of green food to the extent of one-half the total weight supplied, and the seeds should be well blended in something like the following proportions:—

Canary and teazle one quart each.

Hemp, red rape and linseed half-pint each.

Maw seed and niger about two ounces each.

As to the quality of the seeds, the best to be got is none too good.

Egg hard-boiled, and crumbled fresh, should be given in the proportion of half-a-teaspoonful (level, not heaped) per day per bird.

The Need and Benefit of Exercise.

If this diet be adopted then exercise as described below must be provided. A wild bird, owing to the scattered nature of its food supply, is compelled to exercise itself in the search for sufficient nutriment. This exercise keeps the bird in good physical condition and also enables it to escape the more violent perils that threaten its existence. Now, flight alone is an exercise of such a nature as to call for a large expenditure of muscular energy. This demands a generous diet; and that we have provided.

Now the exercise, which combined with this diet results in health and virility, may be obtained by flight alone; but if the birds are also compelled, by the abolition of fixed perches, to balance and grip when alighting or leaving their perch it brings muscles into play in the back and legs that flight cannot make use of. Give your birds, then, twigs fixed at one end only and bushes of evergreen and furze, and place them in a cage or aviary of such height that the birds cannot reach the top except by flying.

Another form of exercise that is most valuable is the bath. Let the birds bathe whenever they wish, summer and winter, but never less than two hours before dusk. Bathing gives exercise to the skin and is as good as massage to an athlete.

The Environment.

Light and air sums up in two words all that may be written under this head. If your birds are like the writer's, indoors, then remove a pane of glass from the window and replace it with wire netting. See that the captives have plenty of sun, but also the opportunity of finding shade when they desire it. Let the room be cheerful as regards paint and paper—no dark colours, for instance.

Talk to your birds at all times. Make friends with them till they will all take seeds from your fingers; never frighten them if you can help it, and never abuse their confidence. If one must be caught, make no pretence—don't hold out tit-bits and then grab wildly when the bird approaches, but boldly follow the one you want until you get your chance to secure it.

The writer by carrying out the treatment outlined above has succeeded in rearing young Goldfinches in his indoor aviary, and is confident that the measure of success he has enjoyed is due to this method, which is itself the outcome of serious thought as to the reason why the more orthodox methods so often fail.

Correspondence.

Advice Wanted on Bird-room Cage Racks.

SIR,—I am preparing a corner of a spare room for my Canary cages (box pattern) and am at a loss to know how to arrange racks to hold them. The wall is papered and I want to leave it so. I would like to place racks an inch or two from the wall so as not to damage the paper. If any reader would kindly let me know the best plan to go on, I should feel extremely obliged. R. S.

The Effects of Vibration on Hatching Eggs.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. James Porter, in an article on unprolificacy, I quoted an identical instance of Wagtails being reared under a railway sleeper as refuting the prevalent idea that vibration has a detrimental effect on incubation, also another instance of good results with Canary breeding, notwithstanding that only a 4½ in. brick wall separated the birds from the clamour and vibration of a powerful engine. In the latter case the effects were very discernible on the cages. But a little study of, say, a Sedge Warbler's nest during a gale is, I consider, fairly conclusive proof of the absurdity of the "vibraphobian" idea. That an unusual shock may cause the parent bird to pierce or scatter her eggs I quite admit. J. STEEL.

The Midland Counties Yorkshire C.C. Trophies.

SIR,—Permit me to again reply to your correspondent, Mr. G. Salt. I see he has evaded my question of where he got the idea of the cup from. Mr. S., you started the correspondence, so be a man and for the benefit of other members either prove your assertion that there was a cup, or own up as beaten. Harping on rules will not help you, as no rule mentions a cup, as I stated before. What do you mean by members not competing for prizes? Nothing in my reply to you mentions such a thing. Who is going to compete if members do not? It is too silly for words, and shows lack of intelligence on the part of your instigator. (Yes, Mr. S., you cannot deny this.) You were only expected to pay your annual subs.; there are no other subscriptions. Donations were given; which prove that we still have some sports left in the club. As for our club not existing many years, I for one should not expect it with such dissatisfied members as you wanting that which was not put up for competition. As for the secretary not replying to you, you would have had a reply in the first instance had you written him in a proper manner, and I do not blame him for not replying to you. I note your threat of getting the cup, but don't forget that others are fighting for their honour and have as much right to uphold their assertions as you have. I am enclosing, for our Editor's kind perusal, the only rules issued by the M.C.G.C.C.

W. G. ANDREWS.

[In the 4-page leaflet of rules sent us, nothing is said about any cups.—EDITOR.]

How Linnet Singing Clubs and Contests Should be Run.

SIR,—Allow me to help Mr. Coward re-forming a Linnet club. A president is selected, chairman and five committeemen, with secretary and treasurer. Then choose as headquarters a place which has a good window, where there is nothing passing by to interfere with the birds. A slide is then made by a joiner (some bird fanciers can make them) so that it can be taken down after the contest is over. Each member's subscription is, say, 2d. per week, with 1s. entrance fee. Every member who enters a bird for a contest pays 3d. per bird. The money that is taken for entrance fees is made into three prizes. Contests can be held every week at very little expense; of course, it is all right if the landlord gives some money to make the prizes more. The secretary has a bag with ten checks in, numbered, and each member draws his checks for as many birds as he has entered. Then he gets tickets numbered with same number as checks he has drawn. These he places on his cages and when he puts his birds into the window it must have a ticket on the cage, or he is disqualified for changing checks. The birds when placed in the window face each other for one minute; then the slide is lowered and they stop another three minutes. That is called one minute spring and 3 minutes bluff. Each bird to sing five seconds before it counts. There are two time-keepers and two tappers, which can be got out of the members, who will, no doubt, take their turns. In this way a singing contest for time can be held every Saturday at a small cost. It will pass many happy hours away. Arrange for open contest singing, so that those who are not members can compete; this helps to get new members, besides getting a change of birds and hearing them sing.

LINNET.

P.S.—I have known us to have a contest when there have been only 6 members present (with birds) just to pass a pleasant hour away.

REPEATING ADVERTISEMENTS.

Owing to the number of announcements received we cannot guarantee to repeat advertisements unless the previous issue, Page, and Column are stated by the advertiser.—ADVT. MANAGER, "CAGE BIRDS."

A Swan with Nine Cygnets.

SIR,—I see in CAGE BIRDS that a correspondent has seen a Swan with seven cygnets on one of the reaches of the River Wey. I would like to say there is a Swan here on the river off Netley Abbey with nine cygnets, and all very fine birds, making with their parents a very pretty picture. I and others have seen them every day for the past fortnight. I shall try and get a snapshot of them. I wish your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, every success. WM. PERRIN.

A Dispute at the Highgate and Hampstead C.B.S.

SIR,—After my last two letters which you were so kind as to publish, re the actions of the officials towards me, and the silence which they keep, it seems to me the charges which I made against them must be true, or they would have been only too pleased to have tried to prove otherwise.

I attended the young stock show on Saturday last in company with two friends, and never in all my experience as an official did I see men shown up so, for as soon as I put my face inside the door and gazed on them—well, if only they could moult their birds put the colour of their faces! Only one gentleman had the courage and courtesy to come and shake hands and pass the time of day, etc. But I am not impatient, as I realise delays are not denials, but as a working man, not having any money to throw away, if the officials of the Highgate and Hampstead C.B.S. do not see fit to let me bring my charges against them in the clearing of my own character, I shall be glad if they will return the two shillings deposit I paid on the understanding that my petition request was going to be granted. GEO. H. NEAL.

Clear Linnet Mules at Longton.

SIR,—I have delayed replying a week to see what Mr. Perrins had to say to Mr. Tams, but apparently he has decided to keep quiet. He has a bad case, evidently. Judging by his letter he has never even seen the "clear Linnet Mules." All he has done has been to buy the parents to sell again at a profit. No wonder he is cross when Mr. Tams and myself tell your readers what we think of the matter. Mr. Tams has at any rate seen the birds, and he very definitely states that they are nothing but "young yellow Canaries." Surely that is enough for Mr. Perrins—he knows where the young birds are now, so why doesn't he get them and prove Mr. Tams wrong? The breeder's statement counts for nothing in face of Mr. Tams' opinion. What about the cases the Editor says he has enquired into this season—five of them!—where all the birds have proved to be Canaries and not Mules at all? I expect the breeders of these were just as positive and would have been just as ready to sign papers as Mr. Bown. It is the birds that count; signed statements are about as valuable as the paper they are written on. Mr. Perrins ought to know that. It is easy to talk about my non-deplume. What on earth does it matter whether I sign my name or not? The facts of the case remain just the same. Mr. Tams says he has seen the "clear Mules," of which Mr. Perrins offered to sell the parents, and he states that they are yellow Canaries. Can Mr. Perrins produce a really good judge to say that he has seen them and considers them Mules? There was a slight error in my previous letter, as it should have read that my Longton correspondent heard about it from a competent judge; and that judge was Mr. Tams.

INTERESTED.

SIR,—Seeing "Interested" was not man enough to answer my letter or give the name of the competent judge that pronounced the young birds to be merely yellow Canaries, I now take pleasure in answering Mr. E. Tams' letter. I ask him if he can prove that the birds were just yellow Canaries and not Linnet Mules, as I should like to know where the error occurred. Also I ask Mr. E. Tams to correct your own statement that he is the well-known judge; give honour where honour is due. I now ask the gentleman who purchased the young birds to come forward with them, so that they can be proved to be genuine light Linnet Mules and not Canaries, as the competent judge called them. I have also sent to the Editor the original paper to show Mr. E. Bown did sign it for me. So now it is up to you, Mr. Tams, to reply, and not give it up the same as "Interested" and his competent judge has done. G. PERRINS.

[Judging from Mr. Perrins' letter, the words we applied to Mr. E. Tams, junr. (viz., "an exhibitor and well-known judge") really apply to Mr. H. Tams, senr. Needless to say we are sorry there should have been this confusion of identities. This makes no difference, anyway, to Mr. E. Tams' ability to distinguish a clear Linnet Mule from a clear yellow Canary, or to the point we raised that the birds themselves would afford the best possible evidence of their parentage.—Editor.]

THE PAPER SIGNED BY MR. BOWN.

I hereby declare that I had bred two light Linnet Mules, 1 clear, 1 ticked on the head, and sold the same to a gentleman named Boff, of the Melfr, also the parents of the Mules to G. Perrins, 26, Lennox Road, Longton, Staffs. Knowing the said Mules to be genuine Linnet Mules, not having kept a cock Canary in my house this last five years, having had the hen in my possession six weeks before being paired to the Linnet.

(Signed) EDWARD BOWN,

Bad Feeding Hens and Their Cause.

Sir, In reply to Mr. A. G. Cant, I have experimented very extensively with a view to ascertaining the reproductive powers of the Canary, and in my article on unprolificacy I dealt with that question, quoting an instance of over 70 young produced from one cock bird in a single season. Respecting hens, I have selected robust specimens and tried purposely to exhaust their reproductive powers and feeding qualities by strenuous tasks during a season, yet though I took in some instances a fourth nest (one hen, I may mention, had no less than seventeen Gules, all reared by her self), I found that given fairly generous treatment and facility for exercise, from August to April was a sufficiently long recuperative period to ensure a repetition of the performance the following season. On the other hand, an experiment I am at present conducting convinces me that some hens (of which kind I have quite a few) are utterly unresponsive to any method of management or material. The maternal instinct has simply deteriorated, that being, as I have said before, a quality which has no place in the high class Canary-breeder's lexicon. Apropos of this, I may state that I have questioned every Scots Canary breeder I have come in touch with as to whether he endorses or otherwise a statement made in these columns by a Mr. Logan, viz., that these Canaries were as hardy and prolific, and quite as good feeders as any other variety. Not a single one held Mr. Logan's views. That the non-maternal behaviour of Scots Fancies and Crests is notorious, is confirmative of the opinion above expressed.

The "Order of the Push" at Abertillery.

Sir,—Kindly allow me space to give vent to my feelings over the way in which I have been treated by the officials and a few members of the Abertillery C.B.S., of which I was a member. On July 8th they called a committee meeting, which six in all attended; they put up a resolution to expel me from the Society, which was carried, 5 for, 1 against. This recommendation of the committee was brought forward at the monthly meeting on July 11th (which was not advertised in your columns as usual) when 13 all told attended. The result was for the expulsion (by a show of hands) 7 for, 5 against, 1 neutral. An amendment was brought forward for a ballot of all the members (I think there are about 25 to 30) but this was defeated. Now, in face of this result the secretary moved that I should be asked to send in my resignation. Well, well! He said he thought it a disgrace to be expelled! I will give the reasons for expelling me. As sole canvasser for the McInery Trophy (which the Society now possesses), I have also been instrumental in adding £6 11s. to the funds, which I am proud to say are in a good sound position, in fact, to cut the story short, I am acknowledged to be the hardest individual worker in the Society. In a recent meeting a certain member threw a sneer at me as regards my knowledge of birds—that it was very little. Of course, I retaliated. This arose through an argument about a marked class and a bit of jealousy attached, because I was elected to judge the first feather show, which I am pleased to say I did most satisfactorily, and opened a few of their eyes a little, instead of them having a little fun, as they thought. Now out of the place where the meeting was held, this same member said it would be either him or me should resign at the next meeting. Result, my expulsion. I therefore make an appeal to brother fanciers to express their opinions to one who has worked hard to build this Society up from the commencement, and who is thrown out in five minutes by a show of hands. Is this justice, thrown out for simply agitating to have equal rights and fair play to one and all?

A. E. MOULE.

[We do not see that discussion in our columns can serve any useful purpose. After reading Mr. Moule's explanation, members of the Abertillery C.B.S. can, of course, take whatever action they wish, in accordance with the rules of the Society.—Editor.]

Do Rooks Pair for Life?

Sir,—I am much interested in the above question, and have no doubt other readers will enjoy the experiences below, which are related by Mr. M. Forbes Tweedie in "Country Life." The writer says:—"Three years ago my boy got a young Rook at school and brought it home with him. It was clipped in one wing at first, and lived here in the garden, becoming quite tame. We shut it up every night in a cage and let it out in the morning. In the spring of the next year it collected sticks in its cage by way of an effort at nest making, and the next year the same; but this last spring it took to going off with the other wild Rooks for the day, always coming home at night. Eventually it was evident that it had mated, the mate coming about the garden with it, and at length, in some cold weather, was persuaded by our Rook to come and feed with it in front of our windows, our Rook appearing to drive the mate up to the food, or, at all events, coming behind it, perhaps to reassure it against attack from behind. The mate did not feed again from our Rook's dish after the cold weather, but was always here ready for him when he was let out in the morning. At length our Rook took to being away at night, and eventually we discovered him with a nest in a Rookery about a mile as the Crow flies. All the time, however, he came here regularly for food, and as the nesting season went on he took to carrying food away in the pouch under his beak to an increasing extent, coming ten or twelve times a day for it, and he walks right into the kitchen and larder and asks the cook for food. He will take nothing but meat from the cook, but on the other side of the house, where he is fed by my wife, he takes anything. He is perfectly tame, and can be stroked or tickled by any of us. At last—about the time the young Rooks flew finally—he came back, as it were, for good and all, and has been about again as usual, except that instead of going to roost in his cage he sleeps in the trees. He could be seen here any day; is a very fine specimen, talks, by cawing, to my wife a great deal, and is always about a good deal with her when she is gardening, and has quite returned to his old life as in the past two years. The young Rooks were shot, I hear, in his Rookery, about the time he came back for good, so to say; but we have never seen the mate with him here since the nest was built. It was a very inexperienced sort of nest—too low down and in a bad place, and badly built. I have referred to him as a male because we eventually made up our minds that he must be the cock bird. It seems, anyway, to rather point to the fact that Rooks only pair for the nesting season."

The Golden Oriole is one of the most beautiful of the occasional visitors to the British Isles, and has been known to nest here. It is about the size of a Blackbird and in colour the male is a lovely rich yellow with jet-black markings. The Golden Oriole has been but very rarely exhibited, being temperamentally unsuited to life in a cage.

PETER BAIN.

Did Birds Originate from Reptiles?

Sir,—Of course the real fact is that both birds and reptiles, as we have them now, originated from a common stock, which during the centuries has split up into two (or more) different branches, one of which is represented by birds and another by reptiles. In nearly all free libraries books can be found that will give a short and easy account of the facts which tend to prove this.

Mr. Hargreaves seems to have read his Bible carelessly if he thinks the Bible contradicts the evolution theory. The Bible is the most wonderful and beautiful book we have, but it was written by different men to teach us something of more importance than science. At the same time it does not at all contradict the idea that different animals may have had a common ancestor. Is it monstrous that all the varieties of Canary are descended from a wild green one?

I did not know that Darwin tried to produce anything but a pigeon from a pigeon, Mr. Hargreaves seems to have read Darwin carelessly, too. Darwin's theory was that it took untold ages for animals to progress upwards, and that very little difference could be detected during so short a time as the life of a man. (Rev.) H. A. SOAMES.

Sir,—Mr. J. S. Hargreaves asks "Did Darwin get anything else than pigeons from all his experimenting?" That great scientist did not expect anything else but pigeons. His experiments were only in the direction of variety. Then Mr. Hargreaves interjects "monstrous!" and seems to think that by the use of this adjective the foundations of the theory of evolution are removed. But adjectives prove nothing; and I should like to point out that monstrous things are very often true, i.e., the back slums of our cities, war, hungry children, etc. The process of evolution is certainly monstrous. We are proceeding now with the gradual struggle upwards from the brute—"Man's inhumanity to man," and all it has entailed.

We are requested to read the first chapter of Genesis. The first chapter of Genesis is a very fine poem, and thanks to the translators is told in very simple but beautiful language; but what have the philosophic ideas of four thousand years ago to do with the theory of evolution? It is a geological fact that climates change. England itself has passed from arctic to tropic and back to arctic again. We are now passing through a temperate period. Fauna and flora which can gradually become adapted to the changing conditions survive; those species which resist adaptation cease to exist. The different climatic conditions compel a change in form and habit in the survivors.

In prehistoric times many species of flying reptiles existed; but no feathered birds (refer to geological works and visit the British Museum). As the climate and temperature changed, some of the flying reptiles gradually (through hundreds of thousands of years) became adapted to the changed conditions. Many became extinct; but the most suitable varieties slowly evolved into our many and varied modern birds. W. CHALCROFT.

Sir,—I often think Carlyle was very near the mark when he said that "People were mostly fools." One of your correspondents has propounded the question, "Did birds spring from reptiles?" While admitting that some of the facts in connection with evolution are indisputable, there are other theories advanced which are an insult to reason and common-sense. Men from monkeys is bad enough (by the bye, can any of your readers who believe in that nonsense tell us what has become of the monkeys' tails?). And now, forsooth, "birds from reptiles" is what we are asked to believe. I shall not be surprised if some fool or another asks us to believe that the Sparrow produced the Eagle, or the mouse the elephant, or the daisy the rose. Scientific research let us have by all means, but upon all such questions as "Did birds spring from reptiles?" let us use our common-sense (if we have any?). J. C. WILMOT.

Sir,—The evolution of the bird from the reptile is obvious to anyone who knows anything of the subject. Mr. Wells demonstrates this beyond doubt. Mr. J. I. Hargreaves' ideas are certainly rather quaint. He apparently imagines that evolution can be accomplished in a generation or two. He will probably be surprised to hear that even a minor alteration takes several thousands of years. His idea about the origin of man is quite wrong. Man and apes were evolved from a common ancestor, not one from the other. This fact he will, of course, be disposed to doubt; but if he has seen the jawbone of this ape-man side by side with those of man and of a chimpanzee, as I have had the privilege of seeing, he would no longer doubt it. Also, is it not rather a curious "coincidence" that man and the apes have almost precisely the same form. The sentences ending in "monstrous" show that he has little acquaintance with natural phenomena; if he had he would call nothing "monstrous" in nature. Genesis was written for people who were as children, and a deeper meaning underlies its words. This is not my own theory, but that of a clergyman. Re Mr. Johnson's letter, scientists do not expect to have to convince men who "have not had the facilities or the advantages of a higher education," but men of their own knowledge and intellectual station. Others are not in a position to question it. R. MAXWELL SAVAGE.

Several letters on the above topic held over.

EVERY HYBRID BREEDER SHOULD POSSESS "CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS." THE STANDARD WORK ON THE SUBJECT. By Chas. Houlton. Price 7s. 6d. "CAGE BIRDS," 154, FLEET ST., LONDON, E.C.

How the Yorkshire Canaries Looked to the Costermonger.

Sir,—It is somewhat amusing to note the peculiar—not to say extravagant—ideas of many people upon the size and length of objects they sometimes see. I was much amused at the vivid description given me of some Yorkshire Canaries by a London costermonger, who had been into the country on holiday bent. This particular costermonger is a keen dog fancier, and, strange to say, particularly keen on a Yorkshire terrier. "I have been on a bit of a flutter into the country," he said, "and I met a bloke who knows you, Mr. Gardner." Of course, I was at once interested; one never knows whether acquaintances are contemplating leaving one a fortune! I said, "Well, and who was the bloke? And what had he to say about me?" "He never spoke a word against you, guv'nor, not 'e. For you; not 'alf! Don't you forget it, he had some beautiful Canaries. Never saw anything like 'em. Why, some of 'em were as long as that"—(indicating about a foot in measurement). I smiled. He said—"Straight! Don't you believe me? How do they get 'em as long as that? As long as whip handles and as straight as a broom handle."

His face was alight with interest as he rattled on—"The bloke said he knows you, guv'nor! And when I told him I had known you these last 20 years, he said, 'Tell him, if you see him, that I have got a few neat 'uns.' And he had 'em in a special sort of cage. I never see the likes afore. Why, the cages stood as high as that (indicating another two feet)."

He whistled and said, "Good morning; I must be looking after these strawb'ries. I told old Charlie, the banana bloke, that his Canary wasn't in it with some I'd seen, and he swore I was 'kidding'! I said 'kidding,' you old fool, why it 'ud take you a week to walk the length of one of 'em at the pace you go!"

Small wonder there is an outcry against excessive length in Yorkshire Canaries if this is how they strike a dog fancier, eh? G. G.

ALL JUDGES AND SHOW OFFICIALS SHOULD USE OUR

special expertly prepared Judging Books. They save much labour and time. We have just issued a revised and up-to-date

JUDGING BOOK.

The advantage this book has over others is that it has 3 columns for awards, and is therefore a great help, and a double check for judges, while there is always a slip free to be sent to the printers of the catalogue.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

N.F. show, July 4, Mr. Farrer judging. His awards were well received. Mr. Conerton gave a stone of seed as spl. for most points, which was won by J. Rishborough. There was a good total of entries, especially when considering the indifferent results obtained by local fanciers. Perhaps with the next round the average may be higher, and so make our last N.F. show on August 1 a banner.

WIDNES.

F.F. show July 4, Conservative Club Assembly Room; less than 30 young birds turned up, but quality was good. Several old fanciers in this district failed to turn their birds out, and in future it would appear to lie to the young bloods to come out stronger and make the Fancy a greater success hereabouts. Mr. Andrews, hon. sec., sticks it right well, and the young fanciers should rally to him and keep matters improving. Mr. C. Houlton judged.

BURNEMOUTH C.B.S.

Annual N.F. Show, July 8, in St. Peter's Hall. Entries came up fairly well, but several of the birds were well broken in their moult, which put them back. Norwich were a good lot, and with a good moult should make some toppers. Mr. H. Matthews won challenge cup for best young bird with a topping cl. buff, wonderful size, and good quality. Mr. Howard showed some youngsters of grand merit. Yorkshires were a good lot, many were quite up to their work, and of great promise. Crest and C.B. were a very nice collection, those belonging to Miss Onslow were well up in size, but several very young, and should make up well. In old birds Mrs. Downing-Farrar showed a grand team. Mr. Bousfield's Yorks were a nice lot, as also were the British and Foreign belonging to Miss Bousfield. Mr. W. R. Miles judged.

MANCHESTER AND N.C.O.S.

25th Annual N.F. show, St. Paul's Schools, Bennett Street, July 4. Entries numbered 160, and quality was well up to the usual Manchester standard. The show attracted a large number of visitors. Gold medal for best team of four young Canaries was won by Mr. F. Wilkinson with a grand team of Yorks. In British birds, the gold medal was won by Mr. S. T. Oldham, with a team of exceptional merit. Other specials were carried off by Messrs. Cook, Brown, Drew, McTurk, Mitchell, James, Massey, and Hope. Mr. W. Smith took premier honours in the foreign section with a grand pair of Red-collared Lorics. All arrangements were well in hand, and all prize money was paid before close of the show. Mr. A. Wellings (Preston) judged, and his awards gave general satisfaction.

ISLINGTON F.A.

Members' show, headquarters, July 11. Mr. Geo. Wainwright, the hon. sec., and his excellent and capable assistants, did all they could to get an entry, but the "fall" of the breeding season and the approach of moult defeated them. Mr. G. Gardner judged. Special best bird was won by Mr. A. G. Lagden, with a nice buff Norwich.

YORKS.: 1, 2, Neighbour; 3, res, Bat-man, leaders very smart upstanding yellows. NOR.: 1, sp, 2, Lagden, buff and grizzle cap yell., nice shape, qual. and col.; 3, Bibb, varieg., good shape. UNWIG. NOR.: 1, 2, Lagden, leader nice body, rare head and qual.; 2, scarcely so clubby, nice feather.

CAMBRIDGE AND COUNTY C.B.A.

Annual Y.B. show, Alexandra Hall, July 9. The birds have not proved very prolific this season, and as a result the entry was only fair. Mr. G. Langley supplied winner of medal for best in show. Mr. J. T. Palmer judged in his usual satisfactory manner, and the staging was superintended by Mr. W. Ridgeon (hon. sec.).

NOR. YELL.: 1 (second best bird in show), 2, Bishop and Son; 3, Nichols. BUFF: 1, Heaton; 2, 3, Manning. YORKS. YELL.: 1, 2, 3, Langley. BUFF: 1, 2, Langley; 3, Bishop and Son. BORD.: 1, 2, Stiles. A.O.V.: Hart. NOR. (Nov.): Cooper. In British Mr. Hart and Mr. Nichols were to the fore.

WINDSOR C.B.F.

F.F. show, headquarters, July 8. 40 birds were staged, and quality was very high, particularly amongst the Yorks. Mr. King secured sp. for best bird with a very fine buff Yorks. Mr. Burfoot judged, and gave every satisfaction. The show was in every way a success.

NOR.: 1, 2, Tilly. YORKS. CL. OR TKD. BUFF: 1, sp, 2, King; 3, Frisby; 4, vhc, Turner; hc, Montgomery; c, Belcher. YELL.: 1, Turner; 2, Frisby; 3, 4, c, King; vhc, hc, Wilkins. BRIT.: 1, 4, Tilly; 2, 3, Wilkins; vhc, Simms. It was decided to purchase a silver cup, to be held by non-bird maker the most points throughout the year, and a hope was expressed that some friend of the society would present us with one for competition amongst the novices. A hearty vote of thanks was given Mr. Burfoot.—H. W. Simms, Sec.

BURNHOPE C.B.S.

Annual N.F. show, July 4, in the Rifle Range, and a better place for a show it would be difficult to find, lofty and well lighted, and free from draughts. Despite a moderate breeding season, entries came up fairly well, close on 60 birds being staged, and quality was very nice, Norwich especially being a very typical lot. Specials for most points in young bird classes was won by Mr. C. Davison with a very nice team of Borders, that were worthy of more competition; medal, best novice, Mr. H. Edgar, with a very smart Border. The society is well favoured in the matter of officials. Mr. J. Robson makes an ideal secretary, and the manner in which he gets through his work leaves nothing to be desired. Mr. W. Reid (Sunderland) judged.

N.W. GLASGOW C.B.S.

F.F. show, Blythswood Halls, Gt. Western rd., July 4. Exhibits were down from last year, but quality was good. Mr. J. Swan judged, and his awards were well received. Specials were kindly given by the following members: Messrs. P. Thom, P. Houston, E. Taylor, R. B. Gibb, R. Brown, J. G. Adams, J. Pimlock.

BOLTON WOODS C.B.S.

Second Y.B. July 4, Victoria Hotel. 46 birds were staged; Mr. L. Dykes judged, and gave satisfaction to all. Best in show was won by W. Goodwin; nov. sp. most points, Mr. J. Smith.

EASTERN COUNTIES C.B.S.

Annual young bird, Ipswich Social Settlement, July 4. The season has been a bad one all over the country; in Ipswich fanciers cannot recall a worse season during many years. The exhibits, however, were in a great many instances of fine quality.

ALFRETON C.B.S.

2nd N.F. show, Red Lion, Alfreton, July 11, when a good number of birds faced the judge, Mr. E. Fox, Long Eaton, whose awards gave every satisfaction.

PORTSMOUTH AND SOUTHERN COUNTIES C.B.S.

5th Y.B. show, Long's Memorial Hall, St. Paul's Square, Southsea, July 8. The hon. sec., Mr. G. T. Hall, with a good working committee, carried out the arrangements in good style.

REDHILL C.B.S.

4th annual young stock show, Watkins' Hotel, July 1. Under the secretarial guidance of Mr. A. W. Bacon, who received great help from some of the members of the committee, the show was a great success.

TREDEGAR C.B.S.

N.F. show of Yorks, headquarters, "Silver Grill," July 11. Forty birds were staged, though the exhibits were not quite so numerous as last year; quality throughout was excellent, and no doubt some of the exhibits will be heard of during the show season. Mr. G. Hale (Tredegar) judged, and had not an easy task, but he gave entire satisfaction.

ALFRETON C.B.S.

2nd N.F. show, Red Lion, Alfreton, July 11, when a good number of birds faced the judge, Mr. E. Fox, Long Eaton, whose awards gave every satisfaction.

ARDWICK & MANCHESTER C.B.A.

Sixth Annual F.F. Show, July 11, St. Thomas's Schools, Ardwick. Considering that many of the members have had a bad season we had a capital entry, 135 birds being staged, over 100 being young birds. Norwich classes were well filled. Amateur class contained 16 entries and the Novice 14. Other classes averaged 9, and some splendid specimens were staged; in fact, they were the best we have ever had at any F.F. show.

Country Rambles

STANLEY (Victoria) F.F. & C.B.S.

The members had their annual char-a-banc trip on July 4, and left the Victoria Club at 7.45 a.m. with a company of 33. We went by Rowlands Gill to Baydon, Prudhoe, Hexham, Whitfield and Alston, where we had dinner at the Crown Hotel and a stroll through the highest and most ancient market town in England. We left by way of Physic Hall Bank and Garrigal on our right, through 18 miles of lovely country, and at High Forse visited the waterfalls and woods, reaching Bishop Auckland at 7 p.m. We had a substantial tea and lunched home at 10.20 p.m. We spent a most lovely day and all enjoyed the grand ride and scenery. This society is to be congratulated upon the progress made, all the members being fanciers to the backbone.—W. Elliott, Sec.

GRANTHAM C.B.S.

Second ramble July 4, when members cycled to Ropsley Rise. Owing to holidays and other causes members did not turn up so strong as expected, but all that went spent a most enjoyable time, as the woods looked beautiful, covered with all kinds of wild flowers. Many birds were noticed: Yellowhammer, Chaffinch, Flycatcher, Wren, Blue Tit, Linnet, etc. A large number of Jays were seen, and these made one wish they could stage one to look as well while resting in the woods. Members mentioned how they had finished breeding. Mr. Barnes has had a remarkable season, over 90 youngsters. Mr. Jackson has bred 40 Norwich, some very nice ones among them. W. Walton has 24 Norwich; Ratcliff, 32 Norwich; Geeson, 34, chiefly Norwich; F. Brewin, 24 Norwich, Mules, and Yorkshires; Tehbutt, 15 Norwich and Rollers; T. Starkey has a few Mules; regret to say our worthy chairman, W. Twilley and G. Mann, have only bred one or two, and trust they will turn out good to make up for loss of numbers. We are thinking of holding one more outing to Belvoir; should another society round care to cycle and meet at Belvoir, we shall be pleased to try and make arrangements with them.—W. Ratcliff.

COLINTON AND CURRIE PARISHES O.S.

Second annual ramble through Riccarton (permission being kindly granted by Lady Gibson Craig). We were joined at Juniper Green by the members of the Edin. C.B.S., our number being 24 in all. At the Corslet gates we were met by our guides, Mr. Haining (factor) and Mr. Scott (head gardener). The first find was by A. Bell, jun., of Liberton, a Wren's with four eggs; a little further on we came to a wall covered with ivy, which we thought would be a good place for nests, but unfortunately it was drawn blank. The boys on the other side among the trees were more fortunate, Mr. Brown locating a Blackie with three eggs, and Mr. Charlton a Thrush with four eggs. A halt was called to muster our forces, and we left the woods for the gardens, where Mr. Scott in a very able and kindly manner answered many questions relating to the flowers, vegetables, and fruit. The gardens were a treat to see. After spending the best part of an hour here, we made tracks for the woods, where we were met by our kind host, Sir Archibald C. Gibson-Craig, and after the officials of the party had been introduced to him, we had a talk on birdy matters with him, and he quite astonished a few of the party by his knowledge of birds in general. Here Mr. Begbie took the opportunity of thanking Sir Archibald, and asked him to convey to his mother, Lady Gibson-Craig, the thanks of those present for their kindness in granting permission to go through the beautiful estate. Sir Archibald said it gave both him and his mother great pleasure to be of any little service in enabling the fanciers of the district to study bird life in its wild state, and he would be pleased to grant permission for us to go through at any future time. After thanking Sir Archibald for his kindness, we took to the woods. Mr. Michie was the only one of the party to find nests with young. After getting the party all together, we left our guides, but not before, in a few well chosen words, Mr. Begbie thanked Mr. Haining and Mr. Scott for their kindness; Mr. Haining replied, saying he hoped we would come a little earlier next year, and we would possibly get more nests. Juniper Green was soon reached, and we adjourned to the Co-op. Society's premises, where tea was waiting for us. After doing good justice to a splendid tea, we adjourned to the Railway Inn, and called Mr. Begbie to the chair. Mr. Begbie proposed toast of "Long Life and Prosperity to Sir Archibald Gibson-Craig and his mother, Lady Gibson-Craig," thanking them for giving us such a pleasant afternoon. Mr. Brown, Leith O.S., proposed "The Colinton and Currie Parishes O.S.," and thanked the members for arranging such a pleasant ramble, and Mr. Charlton, Edinburgh C.B.S., also thanked the members, and especially the sec., for the splendid arrangements made. Mr. A. W. Watson, president of Edinburgh C.B.S., joined in thanking the Colinton and Currie members for inviting the Edinburgh C.B.S. to join in the ramble. Mr. Begbie replied in a few words, saying he hoped when another ramble came round that the members of the Edinburgh C.B.S. would again join us. The evening was finished in song and story, when Messrs. J. Napier, Dickson, Charlton, Brown, Dick, and Begbie kindly obliged with songs, all being greatly appreciated, especially Mr. Dick's rendering of "The Wedding Bells," Mr. Charlton's "Mona," and Mr. Begbie's "Herrin' Barns." The company broke up with the singing of Auld Lang Syne, and so ended one of the most pleasant days yet experienced in connection with the Colinton and Currie Parishes O.S.—Jas. Napier, Sec.

THE WONDERFUL VOLUME

'Our Canaries' Can be obtained for 1/- DOWN.

Many people are making a Splendid Income from Canaries—you can, too.

There is a great demand for high-class Canaries, and those who know the secrets of breeding and rearing them are making a splendid income. Apart from the big profits to be made, it is most fascinating to be able to develop the quality of your birds in the same way as the expert horticulturist improves the beauty and value of his flowers and fruit.

A Mine of Information about Canaries.

Every detail of the wonderful art of producing prizewinning Canaries is explained step by step in "Our Canaries"—a truly magnificent work on the subject. There are very full instructions on the selection of the parent birds, mating, feeding during incubation, and the feeding and aftercare of your Canaries when fledglings, and during the moult. There is also important information on the preparation of the birds for the show bench. In addition to this there is a mine of information on countless other matters, including the treatment of Canaries that are ailing, and how to prevent the loss that so many experience among their young birds at this time of the year.

"Our Canaries" is easy to secure.

In order that you may start right away making more money with your Canaries, arrangements have been made so that you can now secure "Our Canaries" at once for 1/- down. The balance you can pay in easy monthly payments afterwards. If you require more information about this wonderful volume fill in and send the coupon on this page for an interesting illustrated booklet. It has been specially prepared for readers of "Cage Birds," and is quite FREE. In order to lose no time, however, it is wisest to send postal order for 1/- for "Our Canaries" at once.

One opinion (similar to many others which we have received) from a delighted purchaser

No. 6, Co-operative Houses, Brierley, near Barnsley.

Dear Sir, It is with great pleasure that I thank you for sending me that most wonderful volume entitled "Our Canaries." I am sure it is worth every penny you ask for it, and will certainly recommend it to my friends.

It is a marvellous volume on the anatomy of Canaries alone. You can make any use you like of this letter, because "Our Canaries" is a book that needs circulating among Canary lovers. Thanking you again, I remain, yours faithfully, THOS. S. WALLIS.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must, of course, be sent to the Editor.

Canaries, Claude St. John, British Birds, Mules, and Hybrids H. Norman, Foreign Birds—Wesley T. Page, P.Z.S. Wild Bird Life—H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc., of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Borders, Scotch, or any other variety of Canary, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his questions for answer to some leading specialist on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

ERADICATING GREY LICE (B. S.).—I suspect these particular birds are of a weakly constitution, but, even so, the repeated washings should have been effectual; really you washed the birds too often. The object of the repeated washings is to eradicate any fresh insects that may hatch out from "nits" after the first washing, and three washes with an interval of a week between each should be all that is necessary in any case. For the affected birds I would now advise you to scald all nest boxes in strong soda water, and see that all the nesting material is free from contamination, and do not mix up the appliances of this cage with any of the others. Give a bath twice a week in which you have mixed a little sulphuretted potash, in the proportion of a teaspoonful to a pint of water, and continue these baths until all trace of the insects has disappeared. Also give a morsel of bread and milk every second day for a fortnight or so, and once each week add a dusting of flowers of sulphur to it, and on each of the other occasions put on two drops of cod liver oil emulsion and sprinkle with soft sugar. On the alternating day add 20 drops of Chemical Food to the drinking water.

AILING YOUNG (H. Hardisty).—Your feeding is scarcely correct, and I think possibly you may take the young away from the parents a little too early. You say you have not been able to detect whether there is any diarrhoea, yet this should be self-evident by the condition of the cage floor. If you have any more young broods do not wholly separate them until you see that they are beginning to crack canary seed for themselves. Then give a staple of plain canary, and place a teaspoonful of summer rape on top of it each day for the brood. Also continue giving egg food (or you may occasionally substitute a little bread and milk for egg food as a change) daily until they have taken voluntarily to the dry seeds as their chief diet. Allow a heaped teaspoonful of soft food at first between every two birds, and gradually reduce this quantity as you notice the birds eat more freely of the seeds provided. Also give separately a similar quantity of a mixture of cracked hemp and broken groats each afternoon, and gradually discontinue this in the same way as the egg food. Eventually bring them on to a staple of plain canary seed, with a half teaspoonful of summer rape every second day, and on the alternate days a similar quantity of a mixture of hemp, niger, teazle, black rape, millet, and broken groats twice each week, and on two other days a like quantity of egg food. Keep a regular supply of pure fresh water available always, and see that all vessels are sweet and clean. You need only withhold green food for a few days after separating the birds, and then give a few seed-heads of shepherd's purse, plantain stalks, or seedy chickweed, about every second day. Adopt this system now with the ailing birds, dissolve a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a pea in the water for two days, and then add 20 drops of Chemical Food daily for a week or so.

BREEDS FOR SINGING (J. H. P.).—As you want only good songsters, I cannot advise you to go in for fancy varieties as companions for the Rollers. Well-trained Rollers are far and away the best singers of all the Canary tribe, and their association with ordinary singing Canaries is practically certain to result sooner or later in deterioration of the quality of the Roller's song. Therefore, your best course is to have none but well-trained Rollers.—St. Andreasberg or Seifert, if you desire variety in the song, or birds trained to excel in hollow or glucke rolls if you prefer exceptionally long rolling tours. But if you really wish some other variety of Canary they may be placed in the following order as singers:—A first cross with Roller and either Border Fancy, Yorkshire, or Norwich; and pure Border Fancy; Yorkshire; Norwich; Crest or Crest-bred; all the rest on about the same level. For singing keep the birds caged separately, one in each cage.

GROWTH ON BEAK (C. E. H.).—Touch the growth once with a match stick dipped in tincture of iodine, and a few days after this begin to smear it slightly with sulphur ointment twice a week, and continue this for a month if necessary, or you may cease sooner if the growth scales off in less time. Possibly the bird is getting old, and these accumulations are not uncommon in aged birds. No other treatment should be necessary.

WHAT RESULTS? (B. F. G. M. S.).—In the latter portion of this reply last week, the inversion of the figures describing the part of "Our Canaries" advised for reference made it appear as if Part II. was advised, where it was Part XI. Will querist please note?

COLOUR FEEDING PARENTS WITH YOUNG (C. A. B.).—If only the sweet or tasteless pepper is used, and not more than half strength, there is no likelihood of the young being done any harm by adding the colour to the egg food which the parents will be feeding the young with. But there is little or nothing to be gained by feeding the young in the nest; and in addition there is the risk that the parents will not feed the young so freely on the uncoloured food as they might on ordinary food, and if the cock drops into moult deeply the half-strength food will certainly not be sufficient to colour him properly. Therefore, if there is any likelihood of him moulting early you would do best to separate him, and leave the hen to bring up the brood by herself. Otherwise, give the ordinary egg food for the first week or so after the young are hatched, assuming the cock does not commence to drop feathers, and then begin to add a very little colour daily, gradually increasing the strength until it is up to not less than half full strength, and continue with this until the cock begins to moult, when, whether the young are reared or not, you will have to begin with full strength colour food at once if you are to colour-feed him properly, and for this purpose it is, of course, necessary to cage him by himself away from the young.

OUTDOOR AVIARY (F. J. W.).—As you have only twelve square feet of floor space, the aviary is in reality only a good large cage. The height is of comparatively little moment, and you might almost as well have made a division midway between top and bottom, and thus made two cages with exactly the same amount of floor space, which would each have accommodated the same number of birds as this aviary as it now stands. If the aviary is built in a fairly sheltered place, there is no necessity for covered sleeping portion, as the structure is not really big enough to devote space for this purpose, but the provision of a waterproof blind to draw down in wet or very bad weather will be a sensible idea, and this should be quite sufficient protection for the inmates if the structure is not very much exposed in position. One cock and three hens is as much stock as it will accommodate if you are to stand any chance at all of breeding, so you had better forego the idea of having a selection of British birds as well as Canaries. Or you might have a cock Goldfinch and a cock Linnet with the three hen Canaries, if you preferred to try for Mules, but on the whole you would do best to have one cock Canary and this number of hens.

CAUSE OF INFERTILITY (A.C.).—It is by no means uncommon for eggs to prove infertile after the birds repeatedly going through all the forms of successful mating, but it would be impossible to give a definite cause of this without a very full account of your treatment and general management, and full particulars of the condition of the birds. Indeed, even with all this evidence it would not be possible to be dogmatic in all cases about the cause, as the causes of infertility are by no means fully understood. As the cock has failed with both hens, it is most likely that he is the faulty party, and is probably not in breeding condition. You do not even say whether he was in song, or in apparently good health, nor give any particulars as to how you have been treating them, so that it is impossible to advise you on any particular point, and as it is now too late to go on breeding further this year, your best course will be to separate the birds and give them as much space as you can for exercise through the coming winter, and thereby aim at getting them in a good hard, robust condition for the next season. You should get a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," and start treating your birds implicitly as therein advised.

SWELLINGS ON BIRD (Miss W. Harris).—Quite possibly an injection of iodine would be the most beneficial thing, but this, unfortunately, is a form of treatment that I cannot advise you to attempt yourself. Perhaps you could get your medical man to make an injection and see result. Should this fail to give the necessary relief, then operative measures are the only remaining chance of curing the bird, and this again I do not advise you to attempt yourself. Your best course would be to place the bird in the hands of a qualified veterinary surgeon for this treatment.

YOUNG AND PROFIT (Crest).—(1) If the cock was apparently quite well when you mated him, there is no reason why you should not feel quite justified in selling the young birds. If the cock's bronchial trouble was of a chronic nature, or frequently recurring, then you might have some qualms about it, but even in that case it is not certain that the young would develop the same trouble if they were well and properly cared for. The predisposition, and the possibility of the birds becoming affected is, of course, there, but this does not amount to a certainty that the trouble would be developed if the birds were not unduly exposed to exciting causes. (2) I am afraid you take the wrong view of Canary breeding from a profitable standpoint. The fact that you have been unfortunate in your breeding experiments so far does not by any means alter the fact that others may, and do, make a very profitable hobby of it. But, as in every other concern, there are attendant risks which have to be taken, and which may either reduce profit, or obliterate it altogether in some cases, and for some time. And then, profit in this connection is very largely a question of skilled management, and a wise selection of stock. In your own case, for instance, it seems clear to me that your failure to make it a profitable concern is chiefly, perhaps wholly, due to your stock birds not being in that prime health and breeding condition essential to obtaining the best results. It is certainly best to have a separate room for breeding, although many make the hobby a success with only a living room for their birds to breed in, and a separate room without the necessary care and skill in management of the birds will not necessarily ensure a greater amount of success. In short, the whole thing turns itself into a question of management and the possession of strong, healthy, and robust birds, and to ensure the first of these essentials you cannot do better than follow the advice in the pages of the book you have. As regards the latter points this is a question of judicious selection in the first instance, and proper management afterwards. Three pairs of birds is a fair number for a beginner to start with until some experience has been obtained. I do not remember whether your birds are aged or not, but if they are past their second season you would increase your chances of better success next season by clearing them out and starting afresh with two or three pairs of first and second season birds.

IRRITATION (E. Lockhart).—The irritation points so strongly to red-mite attacks that although your care of the cage seems to preclude this pest, I would still advise you to examine carefully the cage at the points where the wires pass through the cross-stays, probing any open joints or cracks with a pin on to a sheet of white paper, and see if this reveals any trace of the pest. If so, take the necessary steps to extirpate them. In addition to this, the bird is certainly moulting, which is to some extent the cause of the irritation. Allow it to bathe daily, if it will do so, and twice each week for a time add a few drops of essence of quassia to the water in the bath. In addition to the usual seed diet give a morsel of bread soaked in cold milk, drained, slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur, and then sprinkled with soft sugar every third day for a fortnight, and on the day following this each time add to the drinking water as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence, and ten drops of lemon juice. Give a spray of green food in variety daily. Do not dust the bird with anything at all. To do so with white precipitate would be positively dangerous.

BALD ON HEAD (L'oiseau jeune).—The bird's diet is not sufficiently nourishing, and this, coupled with its palpably weak condition may not only be responsible for its bald condition, but also for its failure to make a success of breeding. Give a staple diet of a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition to this for the next month give a morsel of bread and milk with sulphur, as advised to "E. Lockhart" in this issue every third day, and on each of the following days add also the potash and lemon juice to the water, and on each of the remaining days, to fill in the intervals, give a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and chopped sunflower seeds. Give a little green food daily, and allow bird to bathe as freely as it likes. During the first fortnight you may slightly moisten the bare skin with sulphur ointment twice in each week, but do not dab the plumage unnecessarily. Keep bird fairly warm when it begins to moult in order to encourage a quick and complete change of plumage, and this treatment should enable it to moult out into perfect plumage.

UNFERTILITY (R. Jessop).—Thanks for your letter giving further particulars about the treatment of your birds. It is impossible to name a definite cause for such a record of infertility as you have experienced. There may have been a lack of affinity between the birds, or, as it is sometimes put, they did not "hit," but this explains nothing satisfactorily. There is also a chance that the birds were late hatched last season, and were consequently somewhat immature for breeding this season. There is nothing seriously wrong with your feeding that can explain the matter, so I would advise you to keep them in the flight during the coming winter, feed them as you are now doing, with the exception of giving egg food only once or twice a week after the moult is over, and thus get them in a good hard robust condition for the beginning of next breeding season, when there is no reason why they should not do much better, and show an average degree of fertility.

BREATHES HEAVILY AND WHEEZES (E. H. Dundas).—The hen seems to be thoroughly out of condition, and your treatment is not likely to help the condition you describe. If there are a few red mites in the feathers there are doubtless hoards of them in the joints and crevices about the cage, and these you must first of all eradicate, as you will have seen frequently described in these replies. Next you must see that she is free from direct cold draughts, and do not hang high up near the ceiling, nor near or over burning lights in the evenings. Keep in a comfortable place, where the temperature is fairly equable. In addition to the staple diet of plain canary seed, give separately half a teaspoonful of summer rape every second day, and a morsel of bread and milk with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and sprinkled with a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, linseed, and chopped sunflower seeds. In the drinking water add as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence and ten drops of lemon juice for two days and after this give twenty drops of whiskey, five each of oxymel of squills and ipecacuanha wine, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken in the water two days in every three for a fortnight. The bare places will probably become covered during the course of the moult, which will very soon take place now.

SWEATING HEN (W. Toovey).—The condition you describe of the hen was due to excessive diarrhoea in the young with watery evacuations. You might possibly have saved the situation by adding a teaspoonful of lime water to the drinking water each day for a time, and adding a third part of the usual quantity of bread or biscuit used in making the egg food in stale bread dried in the oven until it was brown and hard, and then crushed or ground in a seed mill, and used in the making of the egg food each day. A small teaspoonful of arrowroot might also have been added to a tablespoonful of the egg food. This might have kept the hen feeding, and in that case would certainly have set matters right with the young, when all should have gone on in the usual course. See that the cage is kept scrupulously clean, that all your foods are quite sweet and fresh, and add the lime water to the drinking water as mentioned above when the next brood is hatched, and continue it for a few days, and you should be able to avert the same thing happening again.

SMALL CLUTCH AND AVIARY (B. Harris).—(1) As the cock was so mischievous about the nest, you certainly did quite right to remove him and leave the hen to complete the clutch, if she would have done so, and hatch and rear the young by herself, and the fact of taking him away had nothing whatever to do with the hen not laying any more eggs after the first. She would have laid no more in that clutch if he had been left with her. (2) As you are going to keep the aviary indoors, you would have done better to leave out the partition between the sleeping quarters and the wire-fronted part, so that the birds could have had the full space for exercise. As it stands, the sleeping quarters will not only be very dismal from lack of light, but unless it is well provided with ventilation, which I fail to see, it will also be close and stuffy. I would advise you to cut out at least 2ft. Gins. from the bottom of this partition, leaving only the angular portion at the roof, which will provide all the privacy and shelter necessary, and make the whole aviary much more healthy and serviceable. You could keep from 20 to 24 Canaries, or birds of a similar size, in it without breeding; or, for breeding, one cock and three hens would be sufficient to start any season with, or if you removed the young as the season progressed, two cocks and five or six hens might be kept. Any breed of Canary should succeed in it. (3) It is simply a matter of taste whether you paint the inside white instead of distemper it with colour. Paint or enamel wares best, and some light tint can be made to look so much more snug and comfortable than a cold, glaring white. Personally, I should prefer a light tint of blue or green, and only a white if the aviary should have to be placed in a poorly lighted place. In the latter case white would serve the useful purpose of helping to brighten up the interior.

BEGAN TO SIT (E. M. T.).—If the hen was mated with a cock some time before the eggs were laid there is no reason why these eggs should not prove fertile, and you would do well in any case to leave them to undergo the full period of incubation, even if you add a few more eggs from the mixed foreign aviary to them. Only the actual test can prove whether it is any use doing the latter or not. As the aviary is a mixed one, it seems to me very doubtful whether the eggs would be likely to be fertile or not; the risk would certainly be quite as great as in the case of the hen's own eggs. The foreign eggs would also need to be of one of the Finch tribe, or a closely allied species, to be reared by the Canary. A clutch of common Canary eggs, or one of our native Finches, would be a safer experiment. I cannot even guess whether the hen is a Roller from the sound you say she makes. She is evidently out of condition. See that she is free from draughts, and treat her for a few days as you may see in many of these replies for a bird suffering from cold.

COLOUR FEEDING BUFFS (Greenhorn).—I am not clear whether you mean half quantity or half the strength of colour food that you are doubtful about giving to your buff Yorkshires. But in either case it would be incorrect. You should give them just the same colour food, both as regards strength and quantity as you give to the Yellows. You need not fear that by giving them the same colour food you will turn buffs into yellows. The only thing that will happen, and what you must aim at, is that the ground, or under, colour of the plumage will be intensified, but the "mealy" white tips of the web of the plumage will remain unaffected by the colour food, and will in consequence of the greater intensity of the ground colour, be shown up more prominently. For full strength of colour food add two teaspoonfuls of colour to one egg and twice the bulk of bread crumbs or crushed biscuit, and give the birds a teaspoonful of the coloured egg food each per day, to buffs as well as yellows.

ABOUT TWO HENS (J. B. N.).—No. 1 hen has what can only be described as an abnormal cycle of reproduction, the development of the ovaries having stopped short at the egg-producing stage, and as it is so late in the season, it is not at all likely that she will do any breeding this season. If she is sitting steadily you might place a clutch of some other hen's eggs under her, perhaps a deserted clutch, and she will probably hatch out and rear the young the same as though the eggs had been her own. This is also sometimes followed by the hen going to nest on her own account and producing a normal cycle. In the case of hen No. 2 she has doubtless already produced all the eggs she will do this season, and as she has already had two broods you would do well to cease any further attempts to breed again with her this season. If she has not laid any eggs by the time this reply appears your best course is to take away the nest and all nesting material, and turn her into a flight where she can get a good exercise before the moult commences. Add a pinch of Epsom salts to the drinking water for two days after taking away the nest. By stopping her breeding now she will moult out better, and be in a much better condition for breeding again next season.

A SWOLLEN CLAW (A Beginner).—Catch the bird and examine the toe closely to see if there is a strand of nesting material twisted around it, or if the swelling is in reality an accumulation of dirt and sand which has adhered to the toe and become dry and hardened. In either case remove this obvious cause, and if it is an accumulation of dirt soften it by bathing before attempting to remove it. Whether or not there is any obstruction as suggested, bathe the foot for a few minutes in a warm solution of boracic acid—a teaspoonful of acid in a saucerful of warm water. Gently cleanse the feet of all dirt in this as the bathing proceeds, and then dry and anoint the foot with Lanocillin ointment once daily for a few days.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

BLACKBIRDS WITH FITS (W. G. Tucker). Fits are mostly caused through improper feeding, although birds will occasionally have them from nervousness. Gross feeding birds that do not get sufficient exercise are also troubled with them. Although you say in your letter that you are feeding your bird on the best of food, you do not say what it is. If it is the usual insectile food, it should be supplemented with plenty of fruit at this time of the year, and I would also advise you not to be too liberal with mealworms and snails. Vary his insect diet as much as possible. Give him a dose of sulphate of soda in his drinking water, repeating in a couple of days. As much as will cover a sixpence in an ounce of water is the correct quantity. If this and the change of diet does not improve matters, although it should do, you will have to procure from the chemist a 10 per cent. solution of bromide potassium; then, when he has an attack, give about 8 drops direct into the beak, and mix a small teaspoonful in his drinking water. Let him fly in your very largest cage and give the bath on all suitable days.

MOULTING SKYLARK ("Foodless"). There is no reason why you should alter your method of feeding your Skylark during the moult. All you need do is to improve it a little in quality. Unfortunately you do not give me your bill of fare for him, but, anyway, you cannot do wrong by adding a little extra hard-boiled egg and also increasing his supply of insects. The moult is a most trying time for all birds, and a little extra nourishment is quite the correct thing. When you are cleaning his cage out on fine bright days, if you spray him lightly with tepid water you will find it will greatly assist him. Most birds go into moult during this month, and the duration of it depends on the health of the bird and the climatic conditions. Each feather is about six weeks to grow to the full, but, of course, there are many developing at the same time.

MULES AND HYBRIDS (Inquisitive). Speaking correctly, all crosses between different species of birds are Hybrids, but fanciers have divided them in the following manner: Where one of the parents is a Canary they are mostly called Mules, and where both parents are British birds they are called Hybrids.

JAY FOR EXHIBITION (K. Knightbridge). The show cage for exhibiting a Jay in should be of the box pattern, twenty-four inches long, twenty inches high, and twelve inches wide, the wires should be stout and an inch and a half apart. The cage should be fitted with two stout perches, about an inch and a quarter in diameter. For exhibition purposes a Jay should be large, that is somewhat larger than the average bird, the colour of the back rich, the blue in the wing bright and cleanly marked, the ticking on the crest distinct, and the black patch on the cheek dense and cleanly cut, he should be clean and in perfect feather, frayed or broken wing or tail feathers would put him back considerably. To get him into show condition you would have to feed him pretty liberally upon insects, and about twice a week, he should have a freshly killed mouse or small bird, this assists greatly to put a healthy gloss upon his plumage. Let him get used to the show cage, get him accustomed to seeing strangers, or he may be nervous when exhibited.

CANARY OR HYBRID (Puzzled). It is not at all an unusual occurrence for pure Canaries and Hybrids to be bred in the same nest. I have a brood at the present time with two Canaries in it and one Redpoll-Canary. The feather you send, is, in my opinion, one taken from a Goldfinch-Canary. It is rather unfortunate that he is the baby of the family, as size is such an important factor for success in exhibiting. I would advise you to keep the same pair together, as it is just possible they may throw something good another time.

THRUSH WITHOUT FEATHERS (A. S. Ide). There may be two causes for your Thrush being bare in places. It may be due to insects or to improper feeding, unfortunately you do not say how you are treating him, or I could possibly say for certain where you are in error. You had better catch the bird and examine him carefully for insects, and if you find any, dust him well with insect powder, repeating the operation in three days. Let him bathe frequently, and put a little quassa solution in the water. His cage and perches should be thoroughly scrubbed, and kept as clean as possible. When you get rid of the insects the feathers may not grow again directly, but as the bird will be soon going into moult, they will be replaced then. You should send for our Nutshell booklet on the Thrush, it would assist you in your management.

BULLFINCH-CANARY (E. M. T.). If your Canary hen shows any signs of moulting it would be useless expecting her to go to nest. If they are well and healthy another year you could try again; although it is rather unfortunate that she is not larger. I have seen a full-sized Hybrid bred from a very small Bullfinch hen, so if you are successful you may get one decent bird; much depends upon the way in which they are reared. The egg you sent me is that of the Greenfinch, which are usually very fertile, but if it was really the only one laid, I am not surprised that it did not hatch.

LINNET-GREENFINCH (A. Noel Booker). This cross is about the easiest of all the British crosses to produce, the birds to all appearance being very nearly related. For exhibition purposes they are not of much use unless you are possessed of an extraordinary specimen. They have to be shown in the class for Hybrids between two British birds, consequently they have to compete with Greenfinch-Bullfinch, Linnet-Bullfinch, Goldfinch-Bullfinch, and several other rare birds that are difficult to produce. If you are a member of a society I would advise you to retain the larger of the two birds, as he would be useful to secure you a few points against your fellow members. All Hybrids grow very much the first year or two.

COLOUR-FEEDING HYBRIDS (Andrew Wilson). To colour-feed your Hybrid you should procure a lb. of tasteless pepper from some well-known vendor and follow out the instructions printed on the tin. You should commence to give it at once, before the bird gets heavily into the moult. Give it rather weak at first, or he may take a dislike to it, mix it well with the soft food and let it stand an hour or so before using. (2) You could use the same food for your Brambling if you think he requires it.

SKYLARK MOULTING (D. Cottano). No doubt moving the bird from one residence to another was the cause of him dropping into moult. The best thing you can do is to keep him in an even temperature and feed him with good nourishing food. Procure some good insectile mixture and give him three days a week, and offer a good supply of insects. I would also advise you to put a small teaspoonful of chemical food in his drinking water, boil the water first or it will not mix. If when you clean out his cage you were to spray him lightly with water it would tighten up his plumage, but I rather expect he will go through with his proper moult now as this is the season of the year for it.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

AILING PEKIN ROBIN (V. F. B.). The ailing bird must be brought indoors at once if you have not already done so. Bathe its eyes with a dilute rose-water and zinc solution. Do not let the bird swallow any. On receipt of this reply put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water for one day, repeating the dose after an interval of three days. After the soft food is moistened spot over it 10 to 20 drops of cod liver oil or the C. L. O. Emulsion daily till the bird is quite fit again. Get the following mixture: Ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills, and glycerine in equal parts; well mix. Put half-a-teaspoonful of this mixture into the drinking water except when giving the magnesia, till the trouble ceases. Keep the patient in a warm place, but where it will get plenty of sun and air, without draught, on all suitable days. Weather has been quite treacherous of late for new acquisitions. Your soft food is hardly good enough. Get some good ants' eggs and dried flies, and use one part each ants' eggs, dried flies, crushed biscuit, and crumbled sponge cake, first mixing them together and then lightly moistening with boiling water. Also supply fruit and live insects and about a teaspoonful of seed twice a week. A little milkspop daily will be very beneficial at this juncture. Make it pretty sloppy and supply warm. Report progress about ten days hence.

AMAZON PARROT (J. E. H.). So long as the bird is kept out of draught and gets light and air, the temperature of any ordinary room will suffice. Bathe the nostrils once or twice daily with dilute glyco-thymoline (1 in 10), sufficiently often to keep the nostrils clear till the trouble ceases. Twice a week add to the boiled maize (pour over) one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia and put a little Chemical Food in the drinking-water every other day. Supply ripe fruit and nuts regularly, also dry crusts and pieces of biscuit, or you can moisten the two latter in sweetened Chemical Food and water, but not in either tea, coffee or milk. Grit (not sand), cuttlebone, and wood (piece of half-rotten branch) should be continually in the cage. The treatment of a Grey Parrot is similar to that of an Amazon, but unless it be a very young one it does not need boiled maize. The following will cover its needs: Seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts, plain biscuit, stale crusts, and continuous supplies of grit, cuttlebone and wood, also water. You had better get our Nutshell, "The Grey Parrot," 2jd. post free, from our Manager. It will give you fullest details.

GREY PARROT WEAK (E.C.). That it is no worse is a hopeful sign. Continue the treatment in every respect as before, and in addition give half-a-teaspoonful of Byno-phosphate in the drinking water, except on such days as you give the magnesia. It would be well also to foment the legs in hot water daily (not hot enough for disinfector); dry with a soft cloth and then paint with proof whisky. While the weather continues really warm and cold winds are not prevalent, stand the cage out-of-doors, in some sheltered position between 11 a.m. and 5 p.m., but the cage must not be stood where a current of wind will blow through it, or where the full rays of the sun pour down on to the unprotected top of cage. I shall be better able to tell whether cure is possible or not if you will report progress full in five or six weeks' time.

COCKATELS NOT HATCHING (A. Johnson). I have never attempted hand-rearing, or rather, mouth-rearing for that is what it amounts to, any of the Psittaci, and consequently do not consider myself the best individual to advise you. The manner in which the old birds feed them is exactly similar to that of pigeons. The old birds take the beak of their offspring in their own and disgorge the partly digested food from their crops into the beak of the squab, both keeping up a sort of pumping motion during the operation. The first few days will be the difficult time, and I rather doubt anything of the type of fillup feeder being of much use, but there is no reason why you should not try. The best way will be to imitate the beak of the parents with your thumb and first finger, and the mouth of a fillup feeder between them, and work the bulb or plunger of the feeder with the other hand. Soaked bread and biscuit, boiled maize, and soaked silted seeds will be about the best. For the first few days, a sort of thin (weak) milk sop should meet the case, as the birds get older they will take the prepared food simply from between your thumb and finger and from your lips. The latter is the method by which young are mostly artificially reared (study your book). Personally, I should be inclined to only make the three days before they are due to hatch put under their parent—that is, providing they are incubating, and the eggs thus coming off earlier should be hatched out and the young reared. Provide the food named above for them in the usual place from which they take their food.

WHAT PARROT IS IT? (C. Emmett). I do not care to commit myself to an opinion at present, as you omit one or two essential points. You state the colour of the top of the head, but make no mention of the colour of the sides of head and throat, neither do you give the colour of the beak. Please supply these details, and I will try and give you an answer in our next issue. Is the mauve on chest of a light or dark hue?

FOR EXHIBITION (Dodd).—Of course, it all depends on the classification, but a Red-headed Gouldian Finch, Melba Finch, Violet-eared Waxbill, Black-faced Waxbill, Parrot Finch, or some rare Whydah—e.g., Jacksons', or Crimson-ringed, or Queen. The same applies to the Weavers, such as Crimson-coloured, Yellow-backed, Abyssinian Bronze, Grenadier, Speke's, or any other of the uncommon species. Hooded and Columbian Siskins, Dufresne's Finch, and the rare Firefinches; but, of course, it's the condition and steadiness which will tell mainly; rarity will never compensate for this, and see that your purchase is perfect in every part of its body—i.e., feet, toes, beak, etc., its plumage sleek and silken; a frayed tail or flight and a broken feather or short claw will spoil the chance of any bird, however rare.

TO STOP GETTING A COLD (T. Berry).—Prevention is certainly better than a cure, but the only way to stave off a cold is to see that the bird is not kept where it will be subject to draught or chilly atmosphere, and at the same time get light and air. To keep a Parrot healthy, it is necessary to supply wholesome and the right kind of food; provide against constipation by an occasional laxative—Dinneford's Magnesia is as good should consult Page's "Foreign Birds for Beginners" (1/1); Arthur's "Budgerigars and Cockatiels" (6d.); Arthur's "Parrots for Pleasure and Profit" (7d.); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods and Wild Plants" (1/2); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); Dr. Cresswell's "Hygiene of Bird-keeping" (1/1); "Colour-feeding" (3d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each); No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 14 "Gouldian Finches," No. 16 "Academics," No. 17 "The Grey Parrot," No. 18 "Budgerigars," No. 19 "The Pekin Robin," No. 20 "Waxbills." as any. Also give a tonic at moult time, or whenever it appears to need it. Byno-phosphate in the drinking water is as good as any.

PEKIN ROBIN AILING (E.C.).—Supply soft ripe fruit in addition to what you are giving. It would be better to catch up this bird for a few weeks, then you can regulate the bath. Put half a teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia into its soft food till the bowels have been fairly well purged, and then give 10 to 15 drops of cod-liver oil, also in the soft food for two or three weeks. Supply soft ripe fruit liberally, give it 6 to 8 mealworms per diem, also any spiders, carwigs, smooth caterpillars you can capture. As soon as it is properly toned up again, return it to the aviary, so that it may be properly settled there again before chill weather is upon us. When you return it to the aviary, you can put the cod-liver oil still in the soft food for a week or two; this will do no hurt to the other birds.

YOUNG BIRDS DISAPPEARING (F.B.M.).—Though small Finchlike birds are sufficiently active as a rule to keep out of the way of Waders, especially if there are one or two thick evergreen or deciduous trees and bushes about, or other cover they can retire to when pressed, young birds out of the nest are very helpless for the first two or three days, keeping rather low down, often amid the grass, and at the feet of the various trees and bushes, and fall an easy prey to any bird to whom they appeal as a tit-bit. If all have disappeared, it is evident they have been eaten, and if rats can't get in, then the Waders are certainly the culprits. If the young birds had been merely neglected by their parents and died, some of the bodies at any rate would have been seen about.

PARRAKEETS (J.E.H.).—You could add to your present series a pair each of Black-checked, Madagascar and Blue-winged Lovebirds, and also a pair of the larger Parrakeets. You can choose the latter from Rosella, Moustache, Ringnecks, Half-moon, or Red-rumps. I should not put in another pair of Cockatiels. The Moustache mostly appears in books as the Banded, and the Half-moon as the Golden-crowned; the latter are the smallest, both are a little less than the Rosella, but are larger than the Red-rumps, which are not much larger than Cockatiels.

ARE LOVEBIRDS PARRAKEETS (W. V. W. Ross).—Lovebirds belong to the Parrot tribe, and are usually spoken of as Psittaci, under which are grouped Lovebirds, Parrakeets, Parrots, Cockatoos, Macaws, Lories, Lorikeets, Hanging Parrots, Budgerigars, Conures, Caiques, and Cockatiels. If the Green Lovebirds you refer to are offered cheaply they are Madagascar Lovebirds; in this species the hen is all green, but the cock has a grey head. The Lovebirds are an easily kept group of birds, but, like all others, you have to take the risk till they become steady and acclimatised. Canary, white millet, millet sprays, a little apple and greenfood for such as will take it, also grit, cuttlebone, and water about fills their simple bill of fare.

CAPE CANARIES (L. Leech).—These have not shown themselves very free breeders in England, but then, they have not come over in any great numbers, at least are very infrequently on the market, but other series nest readily enough, and there is no reason why the Cape Canary (Grey-necked Serin) should not also do so, especially if given quarters in a natural garden aviary. It has been crossed with the domestic Canary, and the hybrids are sweet songsters and very pleasing.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

W. Savage.—Septic fever. I have not the slightest doubt but that the birds were infected with this disease at time of purchase, for the lesions in this case, from my experience, could not have occurred under a month. You must expect to lose all your remaining birds; in fact, if you have only a few it would be better to destroy them. Disinfect premises, and give up birds for this season. Of course, the birds may have been affected without the vendor's knowledge. It is certainly very bad luck.

M. E. C.—Prolapse of the mucous membrane of the cloaca brought about by straining, coupled with debility. It was in an inflamed condition, in which the oviduct participated.

C. M. A. Bowring.—Congestion of the lungs due to heat. Under similar circumstances removal to a cool shady place and the administration of a saline aperient in the drinking water. Of course, if symptoms are urgent a little brandy, but the inhalation treatment seems to me too drastic.

C. R. Green.—Death from heat apoplexy, as above. Both lungs were highly congested. In all other respects the bird was quite healthy.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

H. Howick.—Many thanks; will utilise at the first opportunity.

T. Townend.—When you supply your correct name and address with your queries our Canary specialist will be happy to try and help you.

C. H. Neal.—If there is a rule giving the committee discretionary power to forfeit deposits, and they have exercised this power, then you have no claim to the return of your cash. With regard to the other question, we are not sufficiently well versed in the facts of the case and in the law of slander to venture upon an opinion. Consult a solicitor.

Instructive Books for Bird Lovers.

The authors, all well known experts in their various subjects, have in each case endeavoured to give in an easily understandable manner, the methods to be employed in reaching success in that particular branch of the cage-bird hobby dealt with. This list comprises a set of books of unique value to bird-keepers. There is all the experience of years of careful study at the disposal of our readers. The books are based on the hard earned knowledge of men who are recognised as the first authorities, and they are able to tell in a conclusive manner all the interesting "ins and outs" in their respective subjects.

AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS, AND CAGES. 2/3 (cloth gilt).—By H. Norman. Contains ten lovely full page photographic plates. A practical guide which deals thoroughly with the proper building, fitting, and management of Aviaries and Bird-rooms, and the making of Cages.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES. 1/1.—By H. W. Batty (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Also lately the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES. 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vule, C. Houlton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kinch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 6, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/-, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT. 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS. 1/2.—By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE CANARY MANUAL. 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, deal big fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Koller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATELS. 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateles is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS. 1/1.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc., Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL. 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts. Part 1: "Hardbills," and Part 2: "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains: beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK. 7d.—By G. B. Weston. Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

BIRDS OF THE COUNTRYSIDE. 5/4.—By Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. A handbook to the wild life of all our familiar British birds; their appearance and habits accurately described. With 12 beautiful coloured plates, and 118 photographic illustrations. A charming gift book.

PETS, AND HOW TO KEEP THEM. 5/4.—By Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. Gives the correct method of housing, feeding, and managing every kind of pet; all sorts of animals are dealt with—monkeys dogs, cats, lizards, tortoises, also gold and other fancy fish, while there is a large section devoted to birds. Contains many coloured plates and photographs. Another charming gift book.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth. 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houston, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge; (associate editors, G. E. Weston and C. A. House). Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS. 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

COLOUR FEEDING OF CANARIES AND OTHER BIRDS. 3/4.—By J. W. Ramsden. Tells you how to mix the colour-food, and how to monitor the birds to get the richest possible colour.

"CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL." A wonderful sixpennyworth of bird literature. See special advt. on Page 543.

FANCIERS' PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memos, with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 5/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

WINTER AND SUMMER VISITORS.

THE BRAMBLEFINCH nests in Northern Europe and visits the British Isles in the winter and early spring.

THE GRASSHOPPER WARBLER nests in the British Isles and winters in North-west Africa and Southern Spain.

The Bramblefinch depicted is the notable specimen owned by Mr. A. C. Brotherhood (Wellington, Salop), winner of a remarkable number of first prizes. The Grasshopper Warbler is the lovely example belonging to Mr. S. H. Mays (Kingscliffe). Both birds won 1sts at the last Crystal Palace Show also CAGE BIRDS £3 Cash Specials, for best British Hardbill and Softbill respectively. (Drawing by H. Goodchild)

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval of which we must be advised is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

SOFTBILLS: the smaller species; full information upon their proper feeding and management in captivity, is given by H. J. Fulljames in "Nutshell No. 25," which also deals with hand-rearing, and describes the collection of ants' eggs, 2d. post free, from: "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. (2d. from agents; see list on another page).

THE Song Thrush and Blackbird.—Full directions how to keep these favourite songsters in the best possible condition; together, with directions for hand-rearing the young and the selection of show birds, will be found in "Nutshell No. 4," 2d. post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from agents (list published frequently).

SOFTBILL keepers, take expert advice before proceeding to buy and keep the larger species of insectivorous birds. You will then have no trouble in keeping your pets in the best of health. This advice is offered in "Nutshell No. 26," by H. J. Fulljames. It is a wonderful little work, dealing with most varieties in a highly interesting and instructive manner. Foods and their preparation, and the various styles of cages also receive full attention. Can you breed Mealworms? This booklet tells you how. Post free, 2d., from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Look at our list of agents; call on the nearest and get it for 2d.

HARRY ALLEN, THE ORIGINAL LINNET KING

Notice! I guarantee all my Rollers I send out cocks. They are bred by myself and there is no finer blood in England, and they are taught under my well-known champion Canary. All cocks guaranteed, 4/6; a few singing nice, 5/6; travelling cages 3d. extra; these Rollers won all before them last year. Try one, Linnets, to moult out sure winners for the bench, 2/- each; Linnets from the same place as the champion Linnet of the world, 1/- and 1/6; a few singing grand, 2/-; these are without doubt the largest and best singing Linnets in the world. I had the pleasure of being at Cawood on the 13th of July (last week), near Selby, where I caught the champion Linnet of the world. I was speaking to the farmer there and he cordially invited me to his house. I have sung many hundred songs in the village, and I am very well respected there. Cawood for the Linnet is like Germany for the Roller, and they are the largest Linnets I can find, without a doubt, in England. Linnets taught by the world's champion, with new cage, and my book of secrets, 3/6; a few with quality notes, right for catching or contest singing, will sing anywhere, 4/6; they call them musical boxes, and they win all before them. Larks, singing nice and low, 1/- and 1/6; they are good birds. A few that will make champions, 2/-; beautiful Lark cages, fit for any room, 1/6; beautiful Linnet cages, 1/6 each, 16/- a dozen. Real yellow cock Greenfinches, like paint, sure winners for the bench, 1/6; young yellow cocks, will moult out winners, 1/- each; cock Brambles, 1/6; Redpolls, 1/6 pair; best Birdlime in England, 1 s. lb., 10d. half, 5d. quarter; if you can find better throw mine away and I will return your money. Best Linnet and Canary whistle in England, 6d. My book of secrets is the best book published of its kind; it tells you the proper rules of contest singing and how they sing at contests, and the proper time for each pair of birds to sing; how much you pay entrance fee, and how much the worthy host should add to it; how to make Linnets sing at one another with their wings down, and how to moult them and how to train them for contest singing; how to make Nightingales, Larks, Thrushes, and Blackbirds sing with full loud voice in five days; how to save the Siberian Goldfinch and the English Peartree Goldfinch from dying. It tells you the proper food for each bird; it has saved thousands of birds their lives. This book will be sent by return for 1/-. Thanking you all for your kind patronage: Harry Allen, The British Bird Champion, City Aviaries, 40, Beckett-st., Leeds. (1707)

THERE is no more lovely seed-eater than the popular Gondian Finch, which, however, is very difficult to establish. This trouble can be overcome, and the variety kept successfully. But you must follow the hints given in "Nutsell No. 14," from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C., post free for 2d. From agents (see list frequently published).

TALKING Green Amazon Parrot, perfect plumage, four years old, magnificent talker, plain and distinct, every word understandable, speaks any time when spoken to, speaks fully 200 words in long sentences (list sent), perches on finger, kisses and talks to you; to prove above will send approval before payment, or heard talking by appointment; £3 15/-; Ashcroft, Eagle Chambers, Liverpool. (1713)

THOUGH they can often be purchased for the modest half-crown, Pekin Nightingales are very beautiful in plumage, have a fine song, and make ideal cage or aviary birds. Some very helpful information on this variety will be found in "Nutsell No. 10," the author of which is Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Get it at once, 2d. post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from our agents (last published frequently).

I enclose Money Order. Please forward the "Annual" to me. I always enjoy reading it.

W. MORRISON, M.A., M.D.

PURCHASE A COPY OF THE 1914 edition of "Cage Birds Annual" NOW you will never regret it, for you cannot spend sixpence to greater profit. No matter what variety of birds you keep, whether you are a novice or old hand, whatever the season, you will find information in "Cage Birds Annual" of the greatest interest and use to you. Now the birds are beginning to moult, you will find information in this big bird-breeder's budget, given by experts from practical experience, most helpful during this trying time. Below is given a list of some of the articles. Just glance down them, and you will be sure to find something of the greatest interest to you. For full list of contents see page 543 of the July 4 issue of "Cage Birds."

MISTAKES BIRDBREEDERS MUST AVOID.

A most reasonable article. Alone worth the small amount asked for the whole book. Mr. St. John's thoroughness in answering queries on the subject of Canary breeding is well known to the majority of our readers. This article, written in the author's best vein, gives in detail mistakes in bird breeding which must be avoided by all who would make the greatest success of their hobby. Besides this highly instructive article, it also contains the following:—

- STARTING A COLLECTION OF CHEAP BEAUTIFUL FOREIGN BIRDS. By F. Meakin.
- HYBRID BREEDING IN OUTDOOR CAGES. By G. R. Pippet.
- A HANDY GUIDE TO BIRD MEDICINES, AND THEIR USES.
- THE SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF BRITISH BIRDS.—By F. Terry.
- DIRECTORY OF THE JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS.
- SEEDS AND THEIR USES. By W. Hobden.
- HOW TO PROFITABLY BREED BUDGERIGARS. By W. H. Gibb.
- SOME SIMPLE METHODS OF BIRDCATCHING. By J. W. Steel.
- A YEAR WITH THE WILD BIRDS.—By H. Norman.
- MY METHOD OF BREEDING CANARIES. By E. T. Sheppard.

£1,000 ACCIDENT INSURANCE COUPON.

In addition to this wonderful budget of bird literature, this marvellous little handbook also contains numerous sketches and art plates, and also of the two best birds of the year, by the well-known bird artist, Mr. H. Norman, Instructive Books for Bird Lovers.

The authors, all well-known experts in their various subjects, have in each case endeavoured to give in an easily understandable manner, the methods to be employed in reaching success in that particular branch of the cage-bird hobby dealt with. This list comprises a set of books of unique value to bird-keepers. There is all the experience of years of careful study at the disposal of our readers. The books are based on this hard-earned knowledge of men who are recognised as the first authorities, and they are able to tell in a conclusive manner all the interesting "ins and outs" in their respective subjects.

AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS, AND CAGES, 2/3 (cloth gilt).—By H. Norman. Contains ten lovely full-page photographic plates. A practical guide which deals thoroughly with the proper building, fitting, and management of Aviaries and Bird-rooms, and the making of Cages.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES, 1/1.—By H. W. Battys (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Absolutely the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES, 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. H. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Houlton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kinch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/-, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2.—By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATEELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/1.—By V. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc., Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts. Part 1: "Hardbills," and Part 2: "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 1d.—By G. L. Weston. Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird-keeping easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

BIRDS OF THE COUNTRYSIDE, 5/4.—By Frank Pinn, B.A., F.Z.S. A handbook to the wild life of all our familiar British birds; their appearance and habits accurately described. With 12 beautiful coloured plates, and 118 photographic illustrations. A charming gift book.

PETS, AND HOW TO KEEP THEM, 5/4.—By Frank Pinn, B.A., F.Z.S. Gives the correct method of housing, feeding, and managing every kind of pet; all sorts of animals are dealt with—monkeys, dogs, cats, lizards, tortoises, also gold and other fancy fish, while there is a large section devoted to birds. Contains many coloured plates and photographs. Another charming gift book.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge; (associate editor, J. E. Weston and C. A. House). Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

COLOUR FEEDING OF CANARIES AND OTHER BIRDS, 3d.—By A. W. Ramsden. Tells you how to mix the colour-food, and how to moult the birds to get the richest possible colour.

"CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL."

A wonderful sixpennyworth of birdy literature. See announcement on Page 21.

FANCIERS' PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memos., with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 5/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

PENGE C.B.S.

Very successful young bird show, held July 8, at Alexandra Hotel, Penge, where a large room had been lent to the society by the popular landlord, Mr. Hutton. The entry was a good one, Yorks. in particular making a fine display. Mr. Fairman's ticked yellow won comfortably in champions; he is a stylish bird with good length of wing and side. Clears in novices draw an entry of seventeen. Mr. Peingdestre staging the cream of the bunch. Norwich were particularly noticeable for type and quality of feather, Mr. Whiffin winning in both classes with tick-set chubby birds, the clear being very promising. A few Borders, Hybrids, and Brit. made up a good collection. The show was well attended by visitors. Mr. Legg managed the show in a very able manner, receiving valuable assistance from Mr. and Mrs. Hutton, whose tasteful arranging of the staging was very effective. Mr. H. Norman judged.

WIMBLEDON C.B.S.

Tenth annual Y.B. show, Queen's Hall, July 13. Entries were 16 fewer than last year. Novices were the largest exhibitors and made a really good show in both Norwich and Yorks. Except for the unexpected lack of support in the champion section, said to be due to the bad breeding season, the show was in every way a success, and a grand array of really good quality birds were exhibited. The arrangements were perfect, thanks to the capable work of the Hon. Sec., Mr. G. Griffiths, and the attendance was extremely good. Mr. J. Robson judged.

CITY OF BIRMINGHAM C.B.S.

Annual N.F. show, Crown Hotel, Hill Street, July 1. Thirty-three Norwich were on view, but notwithstanding the splendid list of cash specials offered, no Yorks., Crests, or Cinnamons were shown, and five 2s. 6d. specials went begging; no young Mules, and only eleven British and Mules (old birds) staged. Mr. J. Bastock put down a fine team, and took special prizes for best Yell., best Buff, and best rung bird in champ. section. In novices, Mr. Jackson took sp. for best Yell. Nor., Mr. Westwood best Bull, and Mr. Derry best rung. Medal for best British, Mr. Jeffrey. Mr. J. H. Roe judged. Members are requested to note that owing to next meeting date falling in holiday week it has been arranged to hold it a week earlier, viz., July 29, at 8.30, when open show business will be dealt with, and a good attendance is desired.

NORTH LONDON C.B.A.

F.F. show, July 11. Entries totalled 126, a few under last year. Mr. A. Trevalion, Novice, Nor., took spl. for best bird in show, and Mr. W. W. Grounell, Novice, Yorks., 2nd best in Brit. Mr. E. Stephens took spl. for best in section with a Goldfinch, and Mr. E. J. Pettet had the best Field Moutlet. This section was really the feature of the show and contained some tip-top exhibits, the Goldfinch class in particular being the best the Association have ever had for quality, etc. In Borders, Mrs. W. J. Salter had the best, with Mr. J. Bell close up. The Foreign section was an improvement on last year. Mr. F. J. Castell gave a good account of himself as Show Manager, with the able assistance of Messrs. T. Cawthorne, C. J. Tolfree and C. J. Williams. Mr. J. Robson judged.

Mr. J. Walsh, Blackburn, has been engaged to judge Clitheroe Old Bird Show, Dec. 5.

Mr. M. Irvine, sec. East Perthshire P.A., writes that Mr. J. Adams (Dumdee) has been appointed judge for show on Nov. 21.

In view of the approaching Bank Holiday, August 3rd, we would remind readers that queries to which an answer is required in our issue of Aug. 8 must be in hand not later than Friday July 31. The offices of CAGE BIRDS will be closed from Friday evening, July 31, to Tuesday morning, Aug. 4.

OBITUARY.

Fanciers in the North, writes Mr. James Craig, Newcastle, will hear with regret of the recent bereavement sustained by the popular secretary of Newcastle C.B.S., Mr. J. W. Reed, in the loss of his respected mother. Having recently lost his father, it makes Mr. Reed's loss all the more severe.

It is with deep regret, writes Mr. R. E. Griffith, sec. North Wales C.B.S., that I have to inform you of the death of the wife of our vice-chairman, Mr. George Jones. Mrs. Jones suffered for over two years and passed away in her 46th year on July 17, leaving Mr. George Jones with a large family. All fanciers will extend sympathy to Mr. Jones and family in their sad bereavement.

Mr. W. Garner.

It is with sincere regret, writes Mr. W. Stafford, Stockport, that I have to announce the death of Mr. Walter Garner, brother to the late Mr. G. Garner. Walter was best known as a breeder and exhibitor of Norwich. Though he was always cheerful in company, we knew he was not in the best of health; still his death was quite unexpected, he expired suddenly on Saturday last from heart failure. He leaves a widow and daughter, to whom I am sure fanciers in general will extend their deepest sympathy.

Mr. John Carter, Leigh.

It is with deepest regret, writes Mr. R. Charleson, sec. Leigh C.B.S., that I have to announce the death, through an accident in the coal mine, of one of our members, Mr. John Carter. He was one of those members that any society could be proud of; he never had many birds to show, but when a show was coming off he was always there ready to put his shoulder to the wheel, a pattern which every member would do well to copy. He was only thirty years of age, and leaves a wife and a daughter six years of age. To them members of the Leigh C.B.S. give heartfelt sympathy in this their hour of trouble.

The Birds' Gratitude.

I should like it to be generally known that my gardener has proved that by placing several basins of water in the garden the birds have rewarded him by not eating any of the small fruit.—Jane Coode (St. Austells) in "The Western Morning News."

Keeping and Breeding Foreign Seed-eaters in Cages.

An error crept into last week's instalment of Mr. Page's article. In the third line of the second paragraph "I am going" should read "I am not going."

A (George?) Washington Story.

A Sparrow who found a lun in the grounds of the White House, Washington, U.S.A., found by the time he had eaten halfway through that it was impossible to back out, and was forced to eat his way out at the other side. He had just succeeded in getting his head out when a policeman came to the rescue and released him from the trap.

Cuckoo's Strange Foster-mother.

Pues is not amicably disposed towards birds, but an interesting case of a strange friendship comes from New Malden. A cat has taken a great fancy to a young Cuckoo, which is being reared by hand. The cat carries the bird about on its back and plays with it as though it were a kitten. If any other cat approaches it is immediately up in arms.

Profiting by Pussy's Misfortune.

It is somewhat unusual for a bird to profit by the calamity of a cat. This took place in a village in Dorset. Two Tom cats met in a garden. They could not agree upon some nice point of honour, and, having decided to fight it out, selected a polyanthus primrose bed as their battlefield. The following morning the primroses were dishevelled, and snowy looks, belonging to one of the combatants, were strewn in handfuls on the ground. A Sparrow with a nest to build saw her opportunity, collected a quantity of fir, and furnished her que-roomed house with the hair of her family's hereditary foe.

London's Poisoned Birds.

An extraordinary tragedy in the bird life of the Villiers street and Whitehall portions of the Embankment Gardens has been engaging the attention of the officials for several days past. When the gardeners went their rounds in the morning of the 10th inst. they were astonished to find a number of dead Sparrows on the grass. They came to the conclusion that they had been poisoned. Subsequently ten fine Pigeons, many more Sparrows, and a Blackbird were found dead, and forty-five birds are stated to have been picked up in one day. A waitress at a tea gardens said that a few days ago she was greatly startled by a pigeon falling from the tree almost on her head. No explanation of the strange occurrence seems to be available. There are no plants with poisonous berries in the gardens, and though it would be possible for anyone of evil disposition to feed the little creatures with poisoned bread or seed, a careful watch has failed to detect any act of the kind. Whatever the cause, it is a regrettable fact that whereas a few days ago a couple of hundred Sparrows would gather round anybody throwing crumbs in the gardens, yesterday it would have been a trouble to find a score.

To Society Secretaries, Advertisers and Correspondents generally.

It would much facilitate our work if Secretaries and others would kindly write out their club reports, notices, etc., in the style in which they see them printed. Write on ONE SIDE ONLY of each sheet of paper used.

Will all correspondents, and secretaries and officials of societies in particular, please note that CAGE BIRDS now goes to press on Wednesday afternoon, so that all matter for publication in our issue of the same week MUST reach us on TUESDAY TO BE CERTAIN OF INCLUSION.

The Judge and the Birds.

In the Shoreditch County Court last week, in the course of hearing a case, Judge Clier remarked: "The first time you have a homily delivered to you is when you are arrested and charged with taking a bird. So far as I am concerned, I wish more birds were taken, and then they would not eat any fruit."

An Address Wanted.

I received a postcard on July 15 from Mr. J. D. Gay, of Louth, saying he had not received ply-wood, writes Mr. E. M. Stanton (Winton, Patricroft). As I have never heard from this gentleman before (nor am I now able to write, owing to no address being given), I am at a loss what to do. Perhaps he will see this in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS.

Across the Antarctic.

Sir Ernest Shackleton's dogs arrived in London from Canada on July 14, and on July 29 the Trans-Antarctic expedition ship, the Endurance, sails for Buenos Aires. These ninety-nine happy dogs are big-hearted lovable creatures. Each is capable of drawing a load of at least one hundred pounds, and they can travel forty miles a day, if necessary. These half savage team dogs had never tasted a biscuit until they started on the voyage from Montreal to London, but they consumed two thousands pounds of Spratt's "Meat Fibrine" Dog Cakes by the time they arrived, and are now confirmed biscuit eaters. The late Captain Scott admitted that his failure to reach the Pole on his 1901 expedition was due to the fact that he substituted stockfish for biscuits as food for the dogs which accompanied him on his final dash. There is, however, no fear of anything of this sort happening in connection with the Trans-Antarctic Expedition, for Sir Ernest Shackleton has made ample provision for feeding his dogs on biscuits, the supply of Spratt's Dog Cakes on board the Endurance being sufficient to last throughout the Expedition.

PRIZES FOR NEW VARIETIES

And the Breeding of British and Foreign Birds.

TO encourage all readers to try what they can do in the matter of evolving new varieties of the Canary, of producing new kinds of Mules and Hybrids, and breaking fresh ground in the breeding of British and Foreign birds in cages and aviaries, CAGE BIRDS is adopting the scheme outlined below, which we hope will commend itself to, and stimulate into action, every bird-keeper who can possibly join in it.

CAGE BIRDS suitable and valuable mementoes are offered to any breeder who succeeds in

- (1) Producing and rearing any new variety of Canary, bred in either cage or aviary.
- (2) Producing and rearing any new variety of Mule or Hybrid, bred in either cage or aviary.
- (3) Breeding and rearing in a cage any species of British or Foreign bird which has not previously been so bred.
- (4) Breeding and rearing in an aviary any species of British or Foreign bird which has not previously been so bred.

The mementoes we offer take two forms:

- (1) A large suitably-inscribed silver medal in case.
- (2) A hand-coloured certificate, suitable for framing.

The choice will rest with the successful breeder.

An additional prize of £1 1s. Cash will be given to the breeder of the Rarest British Softbill in a Cage.

This is presented by Mrs. E. Warren Vernon.

Overheard in the Park.

Two little boys bound on a fishing expedition in St. James's park, London, stopped to watch those heavy comedians amongst birds—the Pelicans. "Bet yer can't tell wat birds them is?" remarked the bigger boy. "Errins." "Wrong." "Stawks." "I don't fink." "Wot yer call 'em, then?" "Why, Water-parrots, of course," was the reply.

Murdering the Microbes.

A very clever and successful fancier friend of mine makes an invariable practice of giving all his birds a weak solution of permanganate of potash to drink once weekly instead of pure water, his idea in so doing being to kill any bacteria lodging in the stomach and intestines. Not being a bacteriologist I cannot say if such a procedure is scientifically correct, but I know that the birds referred to are a remarkably healthy lot.—R. Munnery, in "The Bazaar."

Twenty Firsts in Two Seasons.

I was pleased to see the sketch of my cinnamon-marked yellow Border on the front page of CAGE BIRDS. I bred him two years ago, and in two show seasons he has won twenty firsts. I have bred a few very promising cinnamon marks this season, and I think if some of our larger shows would include a class for them it might induce more breeders to take up this charming variety of the "wee genus." I wish your valuable paper every success.—John Nicholson, Haltwhistle.

Cash Prizes for the Best Written Accounts.

In addition we shall award to each sender of the best written essay in each of Sections 1, 2, and 4,

A Cash Prize of £1 1s.

that is, three guineas in all. In Section 3 the sender of the best written essay will receive presented by Mr. W. E. Teschemaker. Rule 6, of course, applies also to the awarding of all essay prizes, to compete for which the essays must be of not less than 1,000 words in length. In fact the explicitness and helpfulness of the details given will be the chief features taken into consideration when making the awards.

The Governing Conditions.

- (1) Claims for CAGE BIRDS Breeders' Prizes must be lodged with Editor within ten days of the young birds being hatched; and an independent witness skilled with birds shall certify to having seen the young in the nest or with the parents.
- (2) All young, excepting only Canaries and Mules and Hybrids, must be entirely reared by their own parents, hand-rearing not being permissible.
- (3) To qualify for CAGE BIRDS Breeders' Prizes the young of Hardbills and Softbills must live for at least three weeks after leaving the nest, young Quails six weeks, and the young Canaries or young Mules or Hybrids until after their first moult. By "young" is meant one, or more.
- (4) Our definition of a cage is: A cage to come within the scope of Section 3 must be one that can be easily moved, without being taken to pieces, from place to place by one person.
- (5) Written accounts of the breeding, for publication in CAGE BIRDS, must be lodged with us within four weeks (28 days) from the date the young birds leave the nest.
- (6) The decision of the Editor of CAGE BIRDS will be final and binding in every case and he shall have the right to call together a committee of expert bird keepers if need be to assist him in coming to the said decision.

BLOSSOM-HEADED PARRAKEET.

Second prize at Norwich Show for Mr. S. T. Parker of Norwich.

THE SUCCESSFUL BREEDING OF NORWICH PLAINHEADS.

A lecture by Mr. J. Hodder (London, E.C.) before the members and friends of the London and Provincial O.S.

SOMEONE may ask the question: What is the best time to wean young birds off soft food? My answer is, not until they are through the moult, because when they reach the age of nine weeks in the case of early birds, and eight weeks in later hatched birds, they have to be put on colour food and kept on it for six or eight weeks until the moult is over, and by that time they will wean themselves off the soft food. I suppose Nature tells them they have had enough of it.

It is very necessary to keep a careful record of how all your birds are bred. Unless you keep a correct account of the pedigree of every bird, you will soon go astray, as there is a great deal more in pedigree breeding than some think. To consistently breed winners it is of vital necessity to practise careful and judicious inbreeding, but only when you have the pedigree of every bird before you so that you know exactly what you are doing. I have heard of the health of birds suffering because of carelessness in this respect. If no records are kept and birds are put together anyhow—well, what is to be expected but disaster?

Mistakes when Moulting.

Just a word or two on moulting. Some fanciers are fond of moulting their best specimens singly. I have proved this a mistake. If moulted singly they do not come out so good in colour as when moulted in batches, say of six or more. Sometimes when numbers of young birds are moulted together a few develop the objectionable habit of plucking the feathers of their fellows. It is no use trying to cure them with tying bits of string or tape to the wires for them to pull at, these things are not so palatable to them as the end of the feather (I mean the quill) just as it has been plucked from the other bird. They are proper cannibals, you know, when they get the taste of blood. The best plan is to put them in with some old hens, then let them try it on with these old hens, they will soon get taught better manners and leave off their bad habits.

When colour feeding I like to make the colour food as deep in colour as beetroot. A small teaspoonful per bird per day will suffice. I am no advocate of taking the seed away, but if it is done it is best to do it at the break of day for about an hour, when they will eat readily of the colour food which you have made with eggs, biscuits, and sweet pepper. Then leave the seed on the whole of the day. If you moult them in batches, kept in roomy cages, you will find they will moult more quickly, and come a better colour than if moulted singly, as I have already stated. I have known birds that would not touch the colour food when alone eat it readily when caged with others.

Helping Plumage and Colour.

The more room you can give them the better. Don't be afraid to allow them free access to the bath; it will help considerably to rid them of the old feathers and put polish on the new ones. The bath is a wonderful conditioner. I consider when the moult is about three parts through a very good way of binding the colour is to give a little citrate of iron, sulphate of iron, or chemical food in the drinking water, and I am not adverse to a little hot pepper mixed with the other, say one to ten or so.

Never attempt to handle a bird just fining down after the moult. In nine cases out of ten if you do you will find a number of the new feathers in your hand. This is most annoying just before the shows begin, especially if your bird is a good specimen. If you are for some reason obliged to catch them up to do it as quickly and expeditiously as possible. Give them ample time to harden. It is the wisest course not to wash them for the first shows for the same reason.

I know it is most difficult in London and other great cities and towns to keep their plumage from getting soiled before the shows begin, but with a little forethought and care, such as covering them over with light muslin to keep off dust and yet allow plenty of light and frequent bathing, I think they can be kept clean for the first shows. The country fancier has a great advantage over the town fancier in that he can keep his birds clean a whole season by means of the bath only, and so keep the bloom on his birds. This is greatly to his benefit, as with constant washing the bloom is taken off the birds, and, of course, this tells against them when competing against birds still carrying plenty of bloom on the feather. Yet it is of no use showing birds in a dirty condition; even at the risk of washing away the bloom they must be shown quite clean.

Many a good bird goes under because it has not been properly staged. The man who does not take the pains to show his birds properly stands no chance whatever against the man who does. I have seen inferior birds put over others solely because they were shown in better condition. After all, this is only to be expected, as a judge cannot give a bird full credit for what he is if the beauty of his plumage is hidden by dirt. I would strongly advise exhibitors to stage their birds in the best possible condition.

The Strain of the Shows.

What a strain the show season is on the birds constitution, and what a lot of birds we notice go right out of condition, and in many cases into soft moult, about the month of November. We should do all in our power to combat the strain of a heavy show season. Never let your birds return from a show without giving them a tonic in the form of tincture of steel or chemical food, also egg food and maw seed. You may have a cold room, your birds are sent out on a cold day to a show-room well heated, then large numbers of fanciers visit the show until the place becomes quite hot and suffocating. The birds are packed up and sent out into the cold on their return journey. Is it any wonder they get out of condition and go into soft moult? I am sure you will agree with me when I say you cannot take too much care of the birds you are constantly sending out to shows, and I am perfectly sure if they were treated in the way I have described, after returning from each show, we should have less of the troubles that cross the path of exhibitors each year when the show season is about half over.

It is advisable to keep the best birds during the show season separately in suitable cages, and occasionally run them out into their show cages for practice, but a well-bred bird does not require much training; he soon takes his perches correctly, and is on show at every move and turn. Mr. Hodder concluded: "Well, ladies and gentlemen, more could be said about this most interesting hobby, but I think I have now taken up sufficient of your time, and thank you very much for your most careful attention to what I have had to say."

in the meantime it has been kept in a shutter cage and received careful treatment because the song tone and delivery may naturally be expected to be quieter and better than that of the cock which has been allowed full day light, and had access to unlimited quantities of a rich diet.

After this bird has completed his services in the breeding cage he should be taken in hand at once with the view of getting the song as steady as possible. Frequent doses of sulphate of soda will be a useful agent in helping to cool the body, but a little care will have to be exercised so that the doses are not given too large, or too often, so as to cause or set up a diarrhoea. All articles of diet—excepting a little green food, and an occasional snack of bread and milk—should be cut out gradually until the staple diet consists of the best German summer rape.

Long intervals of full daylight must not be allowed; as a guide to this it will be noticed that when the bird is first opened to full light the song is delivered calmly, and better connected; but after a time, say when fifteen or twenty minutes have elapsed, if it is found that the bird is beginning to get excited, and bringing out an objectionable sounding tour, or breaking away from its usual style of singing, then it is time to again close the shutters and subdue the light.

Words of Caution.

I would like to draw attention to the fact that the methods of dieting that I have now or previously laid down should be taken as meaning to apply generally, and in some cases the fancier may have to use a little discretion in dieting to suit his own circumstances. For instance, in our own islands in the autumn and winter months it is much warmer in some parts than in others, then there are those fanciers who live abroad, where the heat of the climate would render it useless, and maybe harmful, to give any rich article of diet, except during the breeding season.

So it will be understood by fanciers abroad that their birds will not require such a rich or heat-forming diet as those that are kept in a cooler temperature, and it may be even advisable for the former to endeavour to reduce the temperature of the rooms by frequently sprinkling the floor with water, or a solution of a liquid disinfectant and water, or by suspending a damp sheet or blanket across the room, renewing it when the heat of the atmosphere has withdrawn the moisture. Their birds should be fed on a diet of rape seed, a little green food, or a small portion of ripe fruit daily, with a small piece of bread and milk twice a week.

In a friendly birdy chat I had recently with one of our oldest—and I should say one of the most respected—of our Roller fanciers, it came as a bit of a surprise to me to learn that the following method of dealing with an unfertile cock bird during the winter had not occurred to him. With every breeding season we unfortunately hear complaints of some fancier finding one or more of his cock birds—and frequently they are the pick of the stock—failing to fertilise a proper percentage of the eggs. Again, the complaint with others is that they find young birds in different stages of formation dead in the shells. Various reasons are advanced as to the cause of this, one is that the stamina of the stock has deteriorated through too closely inbreeding.

UNLESS feeding trays are used, the bottoms of cages and flights must be cleaned out frequently; for it would be dangerous for the young birds to pick up the egg-food that has been dropped and turned stale on the cage bottoms. The use of feeding trays is a labour-saving device, as they catch the waste food, and prevent it from being scattered to the bottoms of the cages. They are made in the form of a narrow box lid, a little shorter than the width of the cage, with the edges about one and a half inches deep, and they must be sufficiently narrow to pass easily through the cage door. One tray will be quite sufficient for each flight, and it can either be placed flat on the cage bottom, or legs could be arranged underneath it. Another way of fixing is to put two small wire staples in the back of the cage, and two hooks to correspond in the back of the tray, also two hooks in the front of the tray to ledge on the front, or bottom rail, and underneath the cage door.

The egg-food should be placed in the egg-food pans, and these placed on the feeding tray; this is better than scattering it direct on to the tray, as it would become soiled by the bird's excreta. Remove the tray and throw all waste food away each time fresh egg-food is supplied.

Discouraging Late Laying.

If the hen has not commenced to moult when the last round of youngsters have been removed from the breeding cage a cooling medicine may be advantageously given for about three successive days before removing her to the flight, as it will have a tendency to reduce her temperature and discourage her from laying again. The diet should be gradually curtailed and made as plain as possible, to consist of plain canary and rape seeds, a little green food daily, also an occasional snack of bread and milk, say once per week. No egg food or rich mixtures of seeds should be given until she breaks away into the moult. When this occurs she may be transferred to the flight cage and dieted through the moulting season as recommended for the young hens.

Where the hen has commenced to moult before the young ones can feed themselves, the above precautions will not be necessary, for immediately the young ones are finished off she can be put into the flight cage, as the strain of the moult will be adequate to discourage any further desire to go to nest.

The treatment of the cocks at the close of the breeding season will vary a little according to the method that has been employed in using them in the breeding cage. With the cock that has only been allowed in the breeding cage sufficiently long enough to fertilise the eggs the diet can be gradually curtailed after the hen has gone to nest with the last clutch of eggs, until it consists of plain canary and rape seed, a little green food daily, and an occasional piece of bread and milk. Half-a-teaspoonful of egg food may be given once or twice per week, but this, and also rich mixtures of seeds, are not necessary until the moult commences; then it would be beneficial to their future welfare if they were allowed the use of a flight cage. If there is lack of other accommodation no harm is likely to accrue should they be allowed to fly amongst the old hens until the spring of the following year.

The Male and the Moulting.

Where the cock has been allowed to remain in the breeding cage to assist the hen in feeding the young ones it is obvious that he must not be removed until the last round has been finished off, i.e., until the young ones can feed themselves. Then if he has already begun to moult he can be placed straight away into the flights, but where there are signs of the moult having commenced the best treatment is that advised above for the cock that is removed from the breeding cage immediately the hen commences to sit. It would be unwise to place him immediately into the flight amongst the others that are moulting, for being full of vim he would make himself obnoxious, and bully the other occupants of the flight. These old birds in the flights should have access to the bath—chilled when the weather makes it necessary—for it will assist in the shedding of the old feathers, and bring the new ones as clean as the proverbial new pin.

With the cock that has been used in the breeding cage, and is afterwards required for a tutor, it will frequently be noticed that the bird that has not spent long periods in the breeding cage will be the most suitable for a tutor—of course, I am assuming that

By WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., &c.

FOOD and treatment are really simple matters if we only bring the same amount of intelligence and thoughtfulness upon the subject as upon the ordinary details that go to make the sum total of the "common round and daily task." Of course, a beginner must have a text book containing general principles, but he must apply them thoughtfully and observantly, so that he may be able to give a reason for the various happenings, favourable or otherwise, which will abound in every experience. In other words, if one slavishly follows the text book and does not think for one's self, there is no progress, and one's experience as a bird-keeper is stagnant.

Now as regards foods, whether seeds, meals, or any others, all must be stored in the dry, and in such receptacles as will keep them free from dust—not very long ago I was looking over the stores of an aviculturist (absent on the occasion of my visit) and found a bagful of biscuit meal all covered with mildew, which was actually being supplied to the birds, and though these were mostly coarse feeders, there were losses; yet to him, in spite of these losses, cause was not apparent. Storing the food properly is as highly important as buying good, clean, sweet seeds, meals, etc.; there is not much use in buying such unless they are kept so as to retain these qualities so long as they last.

Giant Canary Seed Not Wanted.

In respect of seeds, we have already noted that only the best should be purchased; but one other general remark is necessary, and this refers to canary seed—the writer does not approve of giant seed for the majority of the Waxbill and Finch tribe; it is difficult for them to crack as a rule; a medium-sized, plump seed is just as good feed, and more freely taken by the small ornamental Finches.

The staple seed dietary for the majority of Foreign Finches will consist of canary, white and Indian millet, and millet sprays; and as one cannot litter one's cages with half-a-dozen hoppers, a mixture is the most convenient form in which to supply it. This we may well call the staple mixture, and it simply consists of a quart measure (or any other size) each of canary, white and Indian millet seeds, and well mixed together.

There are supplementary seeds which can best be given as a mixture, and for convenience's sake I will call this the supplementary mixture, and it may well include all the following:—One quart wild seed mixture (any good brand), one pint each golden pleasure, German summer rape; half-pint each paddy rice, teazle and linseed, one gill inga, ½ lb. each maw and mustard, 1oz. each dandelion, cornflower, cabbage, lettuce, thistle and plantain, the whole to be well mixed. During the cold months of the year a little crushed hemp and cracked sunflower seeds may be added to the above.

If the reader make his own, self-feeding seed-hopper the matter is quite simple, as if it be six inches long it can be divided into two parts, one four inches long and the other two inches; the "staple mixture" to go into the large division, and the "supplementary mixture" into the other, merely replenishing either one or the other as required.

The Green-food

Then there comes the question of green food; very little comes amiss, all kinds of the seeding and flowering heads of wild grasses; dandelion (leaves, flowers and seed-heads), the same as to groundsel, chickweed—not rank growing, but that of somewhat stunted growth and carrying both flowers and seeds; then such as the seed heads of dock, thistle, teazle, plantain, in fact any of our indigenous wild plants that are not of known poisonous qualities. While on this topic I may state that bunches of the seed heads of wild grasses, dock, etc., may be gathered while they are in plenty, tied up in small bunches, stored in bags, and served up to the birds when the green supply fails.

If obtainable, a small turf of grass and clover, about four inches across, may be put in the cage, with the soil quite moist, but not so wet that water will drain from it; it should be put in the cage two or three times weekly, and will rest the birds' feet from always being in contact with dry, hard sand and turfs.

Then comes the question of soft food. Where only a few birds are kept this is best bought ready mixed—several good mixtures are regularly advertised in our pages. On the other hand, many prefer to mix their own, this presents no difficulty; procure half-a-pound each of best ants' eggs and dried flies, finely crush a pound of Osborne biscuits, mix all together and store in dust proof tins in any dry cupboard—it will keep indefinitely. For use, take the required portion and make crumbly moist (it must not be made into a wet sticky mass) with boiling water, and then stir in a little crumbled sponge cake.

Once or even twice a week, a little sponge cake made into a sop, either with boiling milk or condensed milk and boiling water should be given to all species of birds which will take it, and this should be given daily to any bird showing signs of internal inflammation while the symptoms remain.

Live Food Very Helpful.

Then what about live insects? Most do not associate these with seed-eaters, but in a wild state these play a large part in the "bill of fare" of most of the Fringillidae (Finches), whether native or alien species. Of course there is the ever obtainable mealworm as the stand by, and one or two per bird two or three times a week, or even daily with some species, will tend to their general well-being. The fancier who has the well-being of his feathered pets at heart will capture many a spider, smooth caterpillar, small beetle, or give a blighty spray from rose or fruit tree, etc., to pander still further to the palate of the feathered occupants of his cages, thus making their little lives happy, contented and glad-some.

I fear I have been rather verbose, and perhaps intentionally so; for my aim is not to lay down any hard and fast rules, but rather to set my readers thinking—certainly along lines which I have found successful over a period of some thirty-five years—and to pursue their hobby so that their birds will ever be in tight and silken plumage, and by song and general demeanour fully demonstrate that they possess to the full the gladness of living. Then the fancier will be amply repaid for his trouble, and his leisure hours be filled with interest and pleasure, as he tends or observes his pets.

I find I have neither referred to grit, cuttlebone, or the bath—all are essential to the birds. As regards grit, I do not imply sand, however excellent this may be, but grit, and as town dwellers find such not easy to procure, they had better procure one of the excellent flint grits on the market (see our advertisement) and sprinkle a little on the top of the sand tray whenever the sand is renewed; it is necessary to the well-being of the birds.

A piece of cuttlebone should hang continually in every cage; not only are its properties good for the birds, but as they peck at it their beaks are kept trimmed, and but few cases of overgrown beak will occur where this is regularly used.

The bath should be of the type which hangs over the open door of cage, and not be left there continually. Supply it twice a day during the warm months of the year, but once a day will suffice during the cold period, and during sharp snaps it had better be omitted, at any rate with some species.

My next instalment will cover: Reception of new arrivals, breeding hints, a few homely remedies, and some successful results.

Live Insect Food for Birds.

HOW TO OBTAIN IT.

LIVING insects, in as great variety as possible, form such a valuable addition to the dietary of all insectivorous and many seed-eating and frugivorous birds in confinement that when obtainable during the warm weather they should be supplied as abundantly as possible. It is the one opportunity of the year to offer the birds a change from the monotonous round of dried ants' cocoons, mealworms, and gentles, excellent though these things are as tit-bits during the winter months.

Considerable quantities of insects may sometimes be quickly collected with the aid of a hand sweeping net, obtainable from any entomologist's. This appliance (says W. L. in "The Bazaar"), should be dragged along a hedge-bottom or ditch-side quickly on a summer evening, and its contents periodically emptied on to a sheet of paper spread on the roadside, and from thence quickly tilted into a tin box with a tightly-fitting lid.

Several small tin boxes should be carried; if possible, one for each sweep of the net. Should it become necessary to open a box to take in another batch of insects, knock the bottom violently upon something hard so as to cause any insects crawling up the inside to fall to the bottom of the box, and thus prevent their escape when the lid is taken off to admit of the fresh lot; but even by adopting this precaution several are bound to make their escape, hence a supply of small boxes is best. Furthermore, these small boxes may very conveniently be opened as required and placed in the cages or aviaries for the birds to feed from.

Items from the Garden.

Green-fly (or aphid) is a most useful form of insect life; so are small green smooth caterpillars. By shaking the branches of infested plants and bushes over a large cup or pannikin of water large numbers may be collected. The water may then be drained off and the insects given to the birds.

Earwigs, as all dahlia growers know, may be caught in inverted thumb-pots half filled with moss or paper, and placed on the tops of stakes beside infested plants. The moss or paper should be shaken out daily into a bowl of water, or else into a smooth glazed feeding-dish with perpendicular sides from which the lively earwigs cannot escape quickly. They are liked by many birds, and are a wholesome article of diet.

Caterpillars (the hairy ones are useless) must usually be collected in small quantities, and by hand.

Fresh ants' cocoons, really the most valuable of all living insect foods for captive small birds, are now on sale regularly during the season, and we can personally vouch for the general excellence of the supplies. Only enough to last a few days—say for not much more than a week—should be purchased at a time, and they should be kept in a cool, dry place, in a large flat tin with plenty of ventilation holes. If stored in a narrow deep receptacle they soon become rancid and mildewed, and are in that condition unfit for use.

Training Linnets for Singing Contests.

SIR,—I should like to thank "Linnet" for his letter on running a singing club. Should I be asking too much if he would give us a few hints on how to train the Linnets and get them into condition for a contest?

NOVICE.

A Thrush Returns Home.

SIR,—Having read in last week's CAGE BIRDS of a Bullfinch returning home after having had its liberty, I thought the following might be of interest. On the 11th of July we held a members' show at Ardsley and one of our members had a Thrush entered, but when he went into the bird room to put it into its show cage it got away and, of course, was soon out of sight. On the Sunday he had a pleasant surprise however. About 7 p.m. he saw his bird on the house-top, and on opening the door of the bird-room (which is in the garden) the bird flew straight in, and back into its own cage. We think this very remarkable, as it is a this year's bird.

The Clear Linnet Mules at Longton.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. G. Perrins, I am pleased he has corrected the statement re "Well-known Judge," also I thank you for your note under his letter. I may say in passing that Mr. H. Tams (my father) and myself, have been showing British birds and Mules as Tams and Son for the past twelve years. During the past year we have sold out all our team of birds, so that Mr. H. Tams may take up more judging appointments. I myself shall get together another team when the show season comes round. I also think that any dealer who buys and sells upwards of 5,000 birds in one season, must be a well-known judge or he would soon be stocked up with clear Mules and their parents. I do not know how the Canaries got into the nest, but as the Meir, where Mr. Perrins says the "clear Mules" now are, is only ten minutes' walk from where Mr. Perrins lives, I should advise him to go and see them. The parents of the supposed Mules I saw were a heavily-marked (green) hen and a Linnet. I should think, as the latter's beak was quite white and the bird in very poor condition, it could not have bred Mules; in any case not this year. I am replying in a friendly spirit only, and I hope to see Mr. G. Perrins come round as usual during the bird season and pick out winners as before. I also should like "Interested" to sign his name to his letters, so that we may see in what way he is interested.

ENOCH TAMS.

How Linnet Singing Clubs and Contests are Run.

SIR,—Allow me to help Mr. Coward re forming a Linnet Singing Club. A president is selected, chairman, and four or five committeemen, with secretary and treasurer. Then choose a house where you know the landlord or proprietor will let you have an upstairs room, with a good window where nothing can startle the birds when being hung. Then two boards are made, one foot (or eighteen inches) long by five inches broad, one for each side of the window—No. 1 and No. 2—then a nail is driven into each board. You can have a sing every week-end; open to all, I mean. Then when you get a good muster of competitors, that is the time to start your club. Each member who joins may pay what he likes—3d., 6d., and so on—until he has paid up in full. Make a date for all members to be fully paid up. This will do when the club has been going on for a while—say 10s. a member. Then you can get the proprietor of the house to add to each paid-up member, 2s. to 2s. 6d. This is what has been done in Sheffield for the last eighteen years, during which I have been singing. The way we sing here is, get a man to mark the scores down as they are called out, 1 and 2, also two timers and two tappers. You can sing one minute each way or one and a-half minutes, or two minutes, each way. Get a piece of writing-paper, and as the competitors enter their birds write them down in line. When you have all in, clip each name off, in strips; double up each one and put the whole into a hat. Let someone draw them out one at a time and call the names out. You write them down, say, Jones out first, No. 1; Brown out second, No. 2. Then draw a line underneath; and so on while they are all drawn out of the hat. If there is an odd bird, this one will meet the first bird out of the cap, only the odd bird being timed, however. Three seconds' sing is counted; under is not counted. I don't think there is a man who has trained as many winning Linnets as I have, and I might say I have one that follows me all over the house, and will sing anywhere. It is eleven years old and the keenest judge living would not think he was two years old.

The "Order of the Pits" at Abertillery.

SIR,—Mr. A. E. Moule has my sympathy. As regards him being a worker, he is worth, in my estimation, a dozen of such men as got together to give him the "push." Their action only goes further to prove the jealous and unsportsmanlike men they are. I think discussion in these columns is quite necessary; it tends to keep the Fancy pure. If there is no governing rule of the society (I have been given to understand there is not) they cannot throw Mr. Moule out unless they alter their rules first, which can be done only in a meeting specially called for that purpose.

EBBW VALE.

SIR,—It is a matter of much surprise to myself and many others that the few officials concerned should have adopted such a harsh and unconscionable attitude towards Mr. Moule, and in common with others I think their action was actuated by spite, and not from any desire to serve the best interests of the society. In view of the good work done in the past by Mr. Moule, it is only right that the matter should be referred to, and dealt with by a general meeting.

FAIR PLAY.

["Exhibitor" also writes practically to the same effect as "Fair Play" and "Ebbw Vale," in condemnation of the action taken against Mr. Moule.—EDITOR.]

ALL JUDGES AND SHOWS SHOULD USE OUR

special expertly prepared Judging Books. They save much labour and time. We have just issued a revised and up-to-date

JUDGING BOOK.

The advantage this book has over others is that it has 3 columns for awards, and is therefore a great help, and a double check for judges, while there is always a slip free to be sent to the printers of the catalogue.

The Treatment of Birds by Railway Companies.

SIR,—A lot has been written about the treatment of live stock by the railway companies, but I think the palm can be awarded the Great Eastern Railway. I have had four separate lots of birds by that line, and their history is as follows:—Boxes one and two, both delayed a whole day unnecessarily, so that birds were dead on arrival. Box three was delivered ~~early~~, the box having been smashed to pieces. Box four was not even delivered. It was completely lost. Of course, compensation was demanded and expected, but this line refused to pay more than 5s. a head. Their claim, therefore, amounts to this—they claim the right to do as they please with any birds sent on their line provided they pay 5s. a head! Of course, they must not be judged too harshly. If they paid proper compensation for birds delayed, lost or smashed by them, the sum paid might be sufficient to swamp the salary of an American manager.

F. D. S. (Seaford.)

[In cases where negligence can fairly be alleged, if these were taken to the County Court we are of opinion the judge would hold that the "5s. clause" was unreasonable, and that the proper value of the birds would be recovered. Railway companies most certainly cannot claim the right to "do as they please" at 5s. per head with birds consigned to their care.—EDITOR.]

A Hatching Result which Should Make Fanciers Think.

SIR,—I thought the following might be of interest to breeders of all pure-bred prize stock. At the commencement of the present season I paired a cinnamon Border cock to a clear yellow Norwich hen for the first round. When she laid her four eggs I set her and took away the cock. She sat her time and hatched three young, and I transferred these young to a pair of Borders to rear. Then I paired the Norwich hen to a Bullfinch cock. They appeared to settle down all right, and she went to nest a second time and laid three eggs. About the fifth day I examined the eggs and found two were fertile, when I naturally began to think I was to get Bullie-Canary Hybrids. However, when they hatched they were both Canaries, and pink-eyed birds—one of them is a foul cinnamon and the other a cinnamon-mark. Now it was exactly a month from setting the hen for the first nest until I set her for the second. I have seen what I thought to be a similar thing to this happen with me before, but I had not the same opportunity of proving it as in this case. I would like to hear other fanciers' views on the matter. How long have they proved the germ to have been carried by a hen? I think there may be a good deal of in-breeding done in this manner without the breeder really observing what he is doing with his stock.

A Linnet with One Foot Breeds Mules.

SIR,—I would like to you to know of my experience this season in muling. I bought a Linnet in August and put him all the winter with one of my favourite hens, a Yorkshire. Then I bought a rabbit hutch for the sum of 1s. I took out the sleeping compartment door and put a glass one in its place, and covered the hole where the rabbit used to go in and out of the run with a sliding partition. Next I got two Reller wicker-work travelling cages, took out one side of each, and hung them on a dresser-hook, one in each compartment. Next I got a windowcleaner to get me a couple of old nests out of some ivy. He got me four or five, for which I gave him a trifle. Then I whitewashed the whole concern inside. In March I put in a seed-hopper, put an old nest in each Roller cage, and put both birds in the hutch together. They had a clutch of 5 eggs, and after letting the hen sit her time, the eggs being unfertile, I took them away. She set to work again, and laid four eggs, and hatched out four young. When a week old one died; the remaining three are over a fortnight old, and have nearly all their feathers. I have fed them on plenty of wild seeds and the egg food I mentioned in my letter to CAGE BIRDS of a short time ago, this being made of wholemeal and eggs. The most remarkable thing about my Linnet is that it has a withered foot and claw, this not interfering with the fulfiling of its work. On the day the eggs were due to hatch we moved to another house. I got a brother fancier to help me carry the birds round. During the journey the hen never left the nest. I left the eggs as they were laid, and also left my Linnet with her all the time; not an egg was touched. This is my first attempt at muling, although I have bred Canaries for years. Will Mr. O. George Edwin and Mr. Boscewin kindly let me know how they have got on with my recipe for egg-food (published in your grand paper on Feb. 21st)? If any fancier is in doubt about my Mules they can see them by appointment; address from the Editor.

CHRISWELL.

DID BIRDS ORIGINATE FROM REPTILES?

The "Tails" of Mankind.

SIR,—Mr. Wilmot misquotes Carlyle, but it is fair to assume does not include himself amongst the "mostly fools." He says he admits some of the facts of evolution. Certainly he has a perfect right to admit anything that suits him, but that does not alter the facts. He then asks for information. He wants to know if any of your readers can tell him "What has become of the monkey's tails." If by that question he wants to know what has become of his own tail, this I can tell him: If he has the misfortune during the next frosty weather to sit down hard on the pavement, or—equally unfortunate—has a hob-nailed boot applied to the proper spot, he will discover the joint left where his tail dropped off; and it is still very tender and sensitive. I was going to say as sensible as the other end of his spine. A man is not necessarily a fool because he does not see eye to eye with Mr. Wilmot, and I beg to take exception to Mr. Wilmot's remarks.

JNO. ALLEN.

Why it doesn't Much Matter.

SIR,—Mr. Mansfield Savage's assertion that scientists do not wish people to believe their theories who haven't had a classical education, but those who are their intellectual equals, is reassuring. I was under the impression that they were trying to get their theories into such tinpot heads as my own. Anyhow, so long as they are content that their fads have no interest to anyone outside their own select circle, then it doesn't matter very much; it amuses them and doesn't do anyone any harm. I see the daily press gives the information that the British Association is going to throw the Darwinian theory overboard. Well, well! Those who were readiest to believe in the Darwinian theory will be the first to embrace a new one.

T. JOHNSON.

Evolution just a "Fancy Term."

SIR,—I make bold to challenge Mr. Wells's assertions, which in essence are similar to and quite as fatal as Mr. Coe's. "Proof is afforded," he says, "by the fact that the earliest known bird . . . by its fossil remains had teeth in its beak, claws at the bend of the wing, and a lizard-like tail with vertebrae such as no modern bird possesses." Now that fact, if it be a fact, which is not proved, is no argument in favour of his assumption. He is presenting us with a winged reptile, not a winged fowl or bird. Does Mr. Wells wish to foist upon your readers the delusion of would-be evolutionists that a bird was not always a bird, and that a wingless or winged-reptile was the parent stock of birds? If so, it would be a reflection on the general intelligence of fanciers, as well as a contradiction of true science, common-sense, and human experience. He is no nearer the truth when he declares that "birds show their affinity with reptiles by their methods of reproduction with eggs and the scales on their legs." What nonsense; what a lame argument. There are reptiles which do not reproduce by eggs, and birds on whose legs there are no scales. As well say mankind has descended from the ape, or any other animal, because they produce their kind in similar ways. Theories, speculations, mental conceptions about the origin of birds, will ever remain worthless unless they resolve themselves into the web of life's experience. Mr. Thomson is more cautious in his contribution, freer from the glamour and speculations of dogmatic evolution. His timely warning to ornithologists will, I hope, be taken to heart. Mr. Hargreaves also takes a rational view of the problem, and his advice to Mr. Coe to read the Creation story in Genesis may set his mind at rest. Evolution can give us nothing better. Evolution is a fancy term; one to conjure with; used too frequently by destructive critics to deny creation from design. It has not enlightened us on the origin of life. Birds have always been birds. Darwin, Wallace, Huxley, Spencer, etc., have never found or proved the bird to be other than a bird, nor are Messrs. Coe and Wells likely to succeed where they have failed.

A. McLEAN.

The "Mar-like" Apes have no Tails.

SIR,—The ridiculous opinions and assertions of correspondents palpably unqualified to touch upon this subject are not a little diverting. The zenith of humour seems to be reached when a correspondent seriously asks what has become of the monkey's tails, apparently as a clinching argument that the various evolutionary theories propounded are all at sea. As the term must include the anthropoid apes—the nearest "relatives" of human beings—would it not have been better had Mr. Wilmot ascertained whether this class of monkey really has a tail or not? Let me whisper this softly: There was a time in the pre-natal stage of your correspondent's existence when he himself possessed a caudal appendage, well and clearly defined. Truly, a little knowledge is a dangerous thing with which to enter such a controversy as this; especially so when Carlyle's definition of men in general is tacked on to such arguments as the one in question! Readers must be very grateful for the spice of unconscious humour introduced into the pages of CAGE BIRDS by some of its correspondents in this discussion.

A LOOKER ON.

Experiments With the Young Cuckoo.

SIR,—I was also pleased to see Mr. A. McLean's and Mr. G. J. Johnson's letters on the above subject. No doubt it takes some courage to contradict the views of a professor. There can be no doubt that birds existed before the flood. I do not believe that a majority of ornithologists have accepted the theory that birds have evolved from reptiles but whether they have or not, it has never been proved. I have discussed the subject before, but there was no evidence produced of a definite nature to prove that birds sprung from reptiles. It would be much more to the point if those who maintain that birds evolved from reptiles would experiment with the reptiles nearest to the birds, or the ones they think produced the birds, and see whether they could get birds or not. Mr. Seebohm said "Probably birds evolved from reptiles." But he also rejected the evidence of those who saw the young Cuckoo ejecting eggs and young birds from the nest. Rather a strange way of reasoning!

When I saw it stated that the young Cuckoo ejected eggs and young birds from the nest I accepted it. When I saw it contradicted, I procured some birds' eggs and put them into nests beside young Cuckoos, with the result that the young Cuckoos threw them out. When I stated the facts I met with great opposition. I discussed the point more or less for about two years, but all to no purpose, my opponents even increasing, although I was dealing with facts, and not theory. I had some "heavy weights" against me too, but I stuck to my guns. At last the camera came to my aid, and I made a clean sweep of my opponents. I got Mr. Peat Millar, photographer, formerly of Beith, and now in Australia, to take a series of snapshots of a young Cuckoo, while still blind, in the act of ejecting a young bird from the nest, a bird which I had put in for the purpose. This made a final and permanent settlement of that vexed question.

JOHN CRAIG.

We wish we were at Blackpool.

SIR,—I see the Rev. H. A. Soames says I have read my Bible carelessly if I think the Bible contradicts the evolution theory. I would ask him to point out the evolution passages. I am not one of those who believe that man has been in existence eight or ten thousand years; I believe that man was created by and had authority given him by Our Lord over every living thing. Mr. Maxwell Savage says that if I had seen the jawbone of this ape-man side by side with those of man and of a chimpanzee I should no longer doubt. I would ask any common-sense person to go to Blackpool into the monkey-house in the Tower; there you can see the skeletons and the living chimpanzee. Look at the length of its arms and compare them with your own; its legs are short, nothing like the legs of a man. Man is an upright being; the monkey goes on all fours. I say again that it is monstrous to assert that man has descended from a monkey. I acknowledge that my mind is not as bright and as sharp as it might be; I acknowledge that I read carelessly, but I believe in the Scripture teaching. I do not dispute about the books and the museums; but of what creed were a number of the writers? J. I. HARGREAVES.

[We have deleted a number of passages—most of them quotations from the Bible—from Mr. Hargreaves' letter. Correspondents must remember that CAGE BIRDS is a journal dealing with birds and bird-keeping; under no circumstances whatever can we allow discussion in its columns upon such matters as the finality of, or the interpretation to be placed upon, the Biblical word, and whether the "is, or is not, a God. Further, in our humble opinion such questions need not arise out of a consideration of "Did Birds Originate from Reptiles?" Is it not a fact that most of the men of letters and notable thinkers of our day, including high dignitaries of the Church, accept the evidence for evolution, and see in it nothing inconsistent with Biblical teaching? Wallace—co-worker with Darwin and equally distinguished as a scientist—maintained that even if the ape and man had in the remote past a common ancestor, it required a creative act to change an ape into a man; proof, this, that he saw that evolution could not displace the conception of a Deity.—Editor, "C.B."]

Judging Norwich Plainheads to the Standard.

SIR,—I am a lover of the Norwich Plainhead, and my ambition is to breed a typical bird as near the Norwich Plainhead Club's standard as possible. I have been to various shows to see, if possible, birds as near the ideal as their owners can get them. Some of the winning birds were beautifully ideal. Others were just big, ugly creatures with no pretensions whatever to be called Norwich Plainheads; still, they were placed in front of more typical birds. Now what I want to know is, what stamp of a bird is a novice to go for? If he breeds big birds he's wrong, and if he goes in for type he's wrong again—according to the differences of opinion of the various judges. If the Norwich Plainhead clubs have created a standard, why aren't the birds judged by that standard, and not allow personal likes and dislikes to influence? I think that club committees when appointing judges should make it a stipulation that the birds staged must be judged according to the standard, and not according to the judge's individual fancy. When the show season comes round and you receive your schedules from the various secretaries, you've got to first of all see who is the judge and place birds before him that he likes, or otherwise you throw your money away, besides getting no satisfaction for your efforts. The reason I write this is because I went to the Openshaw and Gorton show on July 18th, and there saw what the judge had placed as being the best birds in show. I think if someone had coloured a pigeon yellow and placed it in a cage, it would have had a dozen special labels on it. I trust that some abler pen than mine will take this matter up, as I think it is a very important one indeed, concerning, as it does, such a large percentage of the Fancy today.

NORWICH STANDARD.

What's Wrong with Rugby's F. and F. Society?

SIR,—It is with much regret I have to inform you that owing to insufficient entries all bird classes at our young stock show (July 15) had to be cancelled. It must be very disheartening to have to cancel after the committee has been to such a large expense. No stones had been left unturned towards making the show a success; the exhibitors had been studied in every way possible, but yet they could not be tempted to show. There were eleven classes, and only eight birds entered all told. Surely it cannot be said that the prize money was too small, 8s., 4s. and 2s. for a 1s. entry, besides specials. This is equal to the greater number of shows, and for a town like Rugby, which runs two societies, the support given does not look very encouraging for the future. Unless the cage bird members take up the question seriously and make a bold move, and show some united effort to bring about a much-needed change, I feel bound to say that classes will have to be excluded at our next show, although the committee are by no means daunted. They will go into the fray with more vigour and zeal than ever for the Oct. show, when we hope that the fanciers will give us a bumping entry and help us out of the difficulty. Has any member new ideas to bring forward?

Prizes for New Varieties.

A Suggestion for a New Crest.

SIR,—As an old fancier—too old for experimental breeding now—I have been interested in your idea of "Prizes for new varieties." In Mules or Hybrids this might be to any extent, if encouraged, the obstacle being that our judges will recognise nothing but "British" Hybrids or British Bird and Canary Mules. Why is there no interest in foreign birds (or semi-foreign) Hybrids; or why should all noticed Hybrids be Finch Hybrids of sorts? But I am more interested in new varieties of Canaries, and would like to suggest one new variety that I think could be accomplished with a fixed starting-point. Many of us must remember the really beautiful "clear body, dark crests" that used to be shown before crests were developed into monstrosities (pray, Mr. Editor, protect me from the Crest men!). Could not the opposite of this be accomplished?—the "dark body, clear crest." It seems to me that a careful crossing of Lizards with green or heavily-marked Crests should lead that way, though of course it would take a few seasons' breeding to get anywhere near perfection. Anyway, I present the idea to younger fanciers, and as I do not want to enter into a "personal" correspondence, will sign myself

BUGLE F.A.

Second annual show, July 15, in good weather, and we think the gate was a record one, Norwich came up well, the winning buff being a gem. Young stock classes were good, and the team shown by Mr. Andrew were splendid specimens and are certain with a good moult to be heard of again. Yorks were not so strong, but the young birds shown by Mr. Boudry are champions, and will do the breeder some good. Mules and British were not over strong. Mr. A. L. Pearce, who took up the secretarial duties again this year, appears to be making good headway, and ably carried out his duties, well supported by a good chairman and committee of good fanciers. The secretary sent back 50 late entries. It would be a good thing if all secretaries would do this, then we should not hear the old story about short entries. Mr. T. J. Ambrose judged, and his awards were well received.

WOLVERHAMPTON C.B.S.

Eight annual N.F. show, July 18, Duke of York, an excellent room. Entries were down through poor breeding and birds dropping into moult, but Norwich made a capital section, Yorks, and British were only small. Mr. W. Harrison, the new sec., was early at his post, and will soon prove his worth, being well supported by a good lot of stewards in Messrs. Hepworth, Loach, Hampton, Cradell, and Gibbons. Special best bird was won by J. Gibbons with a grand even cinn. wing mkl. yellow Yorks., a bird which with a little more length would make a stunner; sp. 2nd best, F. J. Weaver, clear buff Norwich; special for most entries, J. Gibbons, who staged six youngsters out of one nest. Bound volume of "Cage Birds," given by J. Gibbons, for most points was won by Mr. W. Harrison. Mr. W. G. Andrews judged Yorks, and Brit., and Mr. S. N. Taylor, Nor., and gave every satisfaction. NOR. CL. OR TKD. YELL.: 1, Loach; 2, 4, Hampton; 3, Harrison; vhc. Garfield; c. Robinson. STOKE-ON-TRENT C.B.A.

Fourth annual N.F. show, headquarters, July 18. Owing to a poor breeding season the fixture had been postponed from June 29, and the excellent display of young birds proved that the committee acted wisely in altering the date. Entries were not so large as usual, but quality compared very favourably with previous fixtures. Nor. classes were well filled, some very promising youngsters being staged. Yorks were not so numerous, but of excellent type and quality. British as usual were quite an attraction. Mr. W. Bowyer, Leek, judged. NOR. YELL.: 1, Leese; 2, Fox; 3, Roberts. LONDON AND COUNTIES A.C.B. Y.B. show at new headquarters, Victoria Hotel, Charterhouse Street, E.C., July 18; 49 exhibits were on view, of which 44 were 1914 Canaries. Norwich were fairly good in entries, and of good quality, both in champion and novice. Crests were not quite so good. Nov. Yorks made a record show of 19. The house being so central, the show was well patronised. Names were given in for nomination: Mr. W. Ward, Mrs. F. Harrison, Misses F. Cullers and M. Cullers; these will come up at our next meeting, which, owing to the holidays, will not be held until Aug. 17. Mr. F. Easterling judged and gave great satisfaction. CHAMP. NOR. CL. Y.C. AND C.B.S. OF IRELAND.

Xth annual P.F. show, The Mills' Hall, Merrion Row, Dublin, July 15. The hall is an ideal one, having good light overhead and free from draughts, and well situated. Entries were well up on last year, and far better than was anticipated considering the bad season which nearly everyone complained of. The birds were well up to the standard. Keogh won "The Rowan" cup with a very nice tkd. buff cock, while Steward ran up very closely with a good tkd. yell. cock. Dowling won the Hawkins cup outright with a very nice tkd. buff hen, and Wheatly was runner-up with a buff hen. The hon. secretary, Mr. Lattimore, had everything in first-rate order, well assisted by Mr. Dowling, the chairman, and the committee. Mr. Giller judged Canaries, and Mr. Sholeddie Mule and British, and their awards were received with satisfaction. YELL. CL.: 1, sp. c. 'Our Canaries'

Can be obtained for 1/- down. Read below.

Many people are making a Splendid Income from Canaries—you can, too.

There is a great demand for high-class Canaries, and those who know the secrets of breeding and rearing them are making a splendid income. Apart from the big profits to be made, it is most fascinating to be able to develop the quality of your birds in the same way as the expert horticulturist improves the beauty and value of his flowers and fruit.

A Mine of Information about Canaries.

Every detail of the wonderful art of producing prizewinning Canaries is explained step by step in "Our Canaries"—a truly magnificent work on the subject. There are very full instructions on the selection of the parent birds, mating, feeding during incubation, and the feeding and aftercare of your Canaries when fledglings, and during the moult. There is also important information on the preparation of the birds for the show bench. In addition to this there is a mine of information on countless other matters, including the treatment of Canaries that are ailing, and how to prevent the loss that so many experience among their young birds at this time of the year.

'Our Canaries' is easy to secure.

In order that you may start right away making more money with your Canaries, arrangements have been made so that you can now secure "Our Canaries" at once for 1/- down. The balance you can pay in easy monthly payments afterwards. If you require more information about this wonderful volume fill in and send the coupon on this page for an interesting illustrated booklet. It has been specially prepared for readers of "Cage Birds," and is quite FREE. In order to lose no time, however, it is wisest to send postal order for 1/- for "Our Canaries" at once.

IRVINE C.B.S.

First N.F. show July 18, Masonic Hall, Bank St., Irvine, an ideal hall for a show. We anticipated a small turn-out of young birds owing to the breeding season having been so generally bad, but had quite a pleasant surprise in receiving no less than 52 entries, the better classes being well filled with birds of markedly good quality. It is most encouraging that each successive show is a most satisfactory event. This is largely due to the able guidance of our president, and the keen and intelligent co-operation of a first-rate committee. Mr. Robert Jeffrey (Glasgow), assisted by Mr. J. R. Steel (Glasgow) judged, and his awards were received with general satisfaction. In Norwich the principal prize-winner was M. McKean and W. Gavage.

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S.

Annual Y.B. Show, July 14, Reinder Hotel, Rye Lane, Peckham. Mr. J. Robson judged. Entries were a few below last year, but quality was good. Many of the birds promise to do well for their owners at the autumn shows. There was a good attendance of visitors, one making an application for membership (hope to receive many more). Many well-known fanciers and ladies were present. The birds were nicely arranged around the room as usual. Mr. Cant, the sec., had the business well in hand, supported by Messrs. Cole and Tomsett.

BIRKENHEAD.

Y.B. show July 18, Co-operative Hall. Between 70 and 80 birds faced Mr. C. Heulton, judge, and though not quite so many as last year, a fine show resulted. Yorks were of good quality, and Yorks Greens, too. A few good typical Nor. were shown, also a very good lot of British seeders. Most of the winners are fit for any competition. Mr. Secretary Morton did his work as it should be done, and all went smoothly. A fine yellow green Yorks won special for best novice bird (Simmons).

BEAMISH C.B.S.

Y.B. show, Bird Inn, July 18. Entries did not come up very well, but some promising youngsters were staged. Owing to illness of the sec., Mr. H. Elliott, of Stanley, took his place, and he had a grand lot of fanciers to help him. Mr. W. Gawland is chairman of the society, and Messrs. G. Bates, S. Elliott, W. McNay, C. Davidson, and J. Turnbull, were stewards. 51 birds faced the judge, Mr. H. Seeley, Chopington, whose awards gave every satisfaction. During the day a number of old fanciers visited the show and we hear it was a big success.

LIVERPOOL B.B.A.

Meeting and night show, Oldham Hall, July 9, Mr. J. Abbot chair. One new member was nominated. While judging was taking place Mr. J. W. Metcalfe gave the members a few hints on moulting of birds, etc. A vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Metcalfe, and to Mr. W. Young and Mr. R. Brotherton for judging the birds. 95 birds were staged. British have been a feature of the N.F. shows, with an average of 50 British birds and Mules in all. Some excellent birds were shown. The Mule class had six entries, two hybrids, one light mule, one Siskin mule, and two dark Goldf. mules, any of which were likely to win. Mr. G. Barker showed some excellent birds, including the rare Cinnamon Skylark, which was greatly admired. A vote of thanks was accorded to the sec. for having up-to-date prize cards.

BIRTLEY, CHESTER-LE-STREET AND PELTON FELL (Amalg.)

Second amalgamated show July 18, Station Hotel, Birtley, in a large room splendidly adapted for the purpose. About 50 birds faced the judge, and the majority being in first-class feather, they made a very nice display. Crests and C.B. were best in point of quality, Mr. R. S. Bewick staging a grand team. British were not very strong numerically, but for quality they would be hard to beat, very few of them not having held their own in the keenest open competition. A splendid list of officials work for the society, with Mr. T. Lindsay at the head of affairs. As a secretary he is quite ideal. The chairman is Mr. Wm. Davidson, that grand old British bird fancier, and others worthy of special mention are Messrs. Robinson, Ward, Wilford, and Sam Lindsay, jun. Mr. W. Reid (Sunderland) judged.

NOR. (5): 1, Robinson, nearly gr., nice body and col.; 2, 3, vhc. he. Lindsay, nice team. YORKS YELL. (1): 1, Ward, nice length, shape and col. OPENSNAW, GORTON C.B.S.

Second annual F.F. show, July 18, club rooms, Alhambra Theatre, Higher Opensnaw. Entries were larger than last year, and the judge, Mr. T. Harrison (Altrincham) commented upon the nice lot of Norwich. Eleven specials were competed for, and Mr. Chilton took four of these best bird, best Nor., with a lovely Norwich, most points, and best British. Mr. Dewar took sp. best bird bred by a novice and best Yorks bred by a novice. Mr. Green won sp. best Yorks bred by amateur. Mr. Richards best Nor. bred by nov., Mr. Newton best Bord., and Mr. Giles best Mule 1914; this bird was very near all white, and the cage was handled more than any.

ABERTILLERY C.B.S.

Y.B. show July 18, Cwm Assembly Rooms. Nearly 50 birds were entered. Quality was good and competition very keen, Mr. Pritchard being at the front in the champion section with a line lot of Yorks, and Mr. Terrett did best among the novices. In Cl. or tkd. Yorks novice class, 14 entries, Mr. Terrett took all the prizes except the vhc. A few nice Yorks were also staged by Messrs. Russell, Parritt, Morris and Bibbings. In the champ. Nor. Mr. A. W. Hill showed a fine lot. Numbers were small in Nov. Nor., but few nice birds staged by Messrs. Prebort, Morton and Selby. Bord. were small in numbers, but some very gems were staged by Mr. Cooper, who won sp. for most points in Bordets. Other specials: Yorks, Pritchard; Nor., Morton; Mules and Brit., Mortimer. Mr. Henry Phillips, of Ebbw Vale, judged, and gave every satisfaction.

CL. OR TKD. NOR. CHAMP.: 1, 2, 3, Mortimer. MKD. OR VAR.: 1, 2, 3, 4, vhc. he. Hill. CL. OR TKD. NOV.: 1, sp, 2, Morton; 3, Selby. MKD. OR VAR.: 1, 3, Selby; 2, Morton; 4, vhc. he. Parritt. YORKS CL. LONDON AND PROVINCIAL O.S.

Y.B. show, The Raglan, July 16, Mr. Geo. Gardner judged. 70 exhibits staged. A very good entry, the Nov. Nor. and Nov. Yorks being the largest classes. Lancs., Lizards and Bords. were represented, and there were some very nice Mules and foreigners. President Mr. Geo. Crabb received a very warm welcome on his return among us after his long illness. Several members do not seem quite clear as to what the society are doing in regard to the autumn show. The L. and P.O.S. are giving their support to Mr. Ramsden's Crystal Palace Show by offering their six silver cups and giving 40 money specials to be competed for by members only, and the prize money is guaranteed by Mr. Ramsden. It is hoped members will send in large entries so as to enable the specials to be won, as unless there are three competitors in each class where specials are offered, the specials are withdrawn. Those joining now are entitled to compete for all specials.

YORKS YELL. CHAMP.: 1, Fairman; 2, Salter; vhc. e. Clarke. BUFF: 1, 2, Clarke; vhc. Salter; he. Fairman. BORD.: 1, 2, Mrs. Salter; vhc. Newley; he. e. Shakespeare. A.O.V.: 1, Shakespeare; vhc. Crabb. FOR.: 1, vhc. Newley; 2, Mdm. Madewell; he. Mrs. Huggins. The L. and P.O.S. silver medals, Fairman, Harris, Mdm. Madewell, and Law. Bronze: Mrs. Salter, Harris, and Newley. Most points specials, Clarke, Harris, and Mdm. Madewell; second most points, Mrs. Salter, Everett and Taylor, Law.

Mr. Geo. Couzens (chairman), in presenting the medals and specials, said how pleased they all were in seeing Mr. Crabb amongst them after his long absence through illness, and he felt certain all our absent members and friends would endorse these feelings. He also remarked on the good entry and the fine quality of the birds, and on the very large attendance of visitors.—C. W. Law, Hon. Sec.

(Owing to an enormous number of reports of First Feather Shows again reaching us this week, several have had to be held over until our next issue.)

Club Reports.

NORTH LIVERPOOL C.B.S.

Meeting held July 1, Mr. Holden presiding before a fair attendance. Messrs. Plunkett, Richardson, and Metcalfe elected members. Mr. E. McCoy's name has been omitted from the committee on membership cards, and the champion Yorks cup should read the "McCoy challenge cup"; numbers please note. Next meeting August 5 at 8, when arrangements will be made for the October show.

LEICESTER C.B.S.

Meeting at headquarters, July 15, Mr. Highton chair. Decided to hold our late N.F. show Aug. 12, instead of 15th, and to have three classes. Mr. Hille will judge. Mr. Hille gave a most interesting lecture on "Colour Feeding," from which we all gathered a few points. At the close he answered questions to everybody's satisfaction, and a hearty vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Hille.—J. Hardbottle.

CARDIFF C.B.S.

Meeting July 11, Mr. E. Allopp presided. Prize-money won at young bird show was paid. Resolved to hold a members' show Oct. 16, birds to be staged at 3.30, and to have 37 classes. Sec. was instructed to write judge elect re terms. Resolved to hold annual pair show Dec. 26. For the classification of open show, also other important business, I trust all members will attend, as we want their help in preparing schedule. I shall be pleased to supply with particulars any fancier who would care to join our society. L. Thomas, Sec., 48, Craddock Street.

CHOPWELL C.B.S.

Meeting Club Hall, July 18, Mr. M. Shapson chair, and a splendid turn-out of members. Schedule for annual show drawn up. Messrs. R. South and W. Marsh, of Blackhall Mill, elected members. Owing to pressure of business, our sec., Mr. W. Tomlinson, has been compelled to resign, and his duties have been taken over by Mr. W. H. Christer, but Mr. Tomlinson has agreed to stand as assist. sec. and treasurer. Decided to only hold members' show this year. Will all members and intending members try to attend our next meeting, Aug. 15? Subs. 2s. 6d.—W. H. Christer, Sec.

LONDON C.B.A.

General meeting, "El Vino," July 14. Mr. R. L. Crisp chair. Owing to absence of sec., assist. sec. Mr. Wallington ably filled his place. Several important matters in connection with the annual show were dealt with. Mr. Wallington presented the balance sheet of the young bird show, and was accorded a vote of thanks, with Mr. Cook for the management of same. Messrs. Fayer, Watcham, Eastling, Dewhurst, and Johnston gave their varied experiences during the breeding season, and it was apparent from their remarks that they have had a good season. A committee meeting was held, and letters from the Lancashire and Lizard F.A., and the British Roller Club were read. Vote of thanks to the chairman closed the meeting.—Frederick Knight, Press Correspondent.

BURNLEY O.S.

Meeting headquarters, Star Inn, July 16, Mr. Spencer chair, and a good turn-up of members. The business was election of new secretary and chairman, owing to the resignation of Mr. Whittaker, who was pressed hard to reconsider his decision. Mr. T. Chadwick was elected sec., and Mr. H. Catlow chairman. We should like to see a few new members in our society, as there are plenty of fanciers outside, and it would be a great advantage to them. The sub. is only 4s. per year, and they would be made welcome. Next Sat. we are having a raffle, conducted by the well-known British exhibitor, Mr. J. Holden. We are expecting to visit Holme Chapel, and lectures will be given on wayside seeds and habits of British birds. We hope to have a good turn-up, as we are to have a treat. Meet at headquarters 2.15. Next meeting Aug. 12, when subs. are due. Members, turn up, as we are proposing a trip to the Palace Show.—T. Chadwick, Sec., 42, Shale Street, Burnley.

LANCASHIRE AND LIZARD F.A.

Meeting July 18, Newmarket Hotel, Manchester. A fair number turned up, but considering the important business to be decided, it was on the whole disappointing to find such a moderate attendance. Mr. E. Fuller chair. Patronage granted to Sheffield for Lancashire and Lizards, and Liverpool for four classes of Lizards. Decided to have club show at Denton, Nov. 21, in connection with Denton members' show. A new departure will be made in regard to prize money, as Mr. Stansfield has guaranteed 4 Lanza lire and 4 Lizard cock classes, Messrs. J. E. Ollershaw and Rukin 2 Lizard hen classes, and Messrs. Fuller and Ridgard two Lanza-hire hen classes, 6s., 4s., 2s. will be paid, however small the entries, and it now rests with the members whether it will be a success or not. Mr. Stansfield, who is heart and soul in his scheme, will see to the staging, receiving, and packing of all exhibits. Entry fee 1c. Judge will be selected later. The classes at Liverpool are being guaranteed by Messrs. J. W. Metcalf, J. E. Ollershaw, and the L. and L.F.A. Mr. Bradley's scheme for providing a trophy value £10 10s. for Lizard Canaries was discussed. Mr. Bradley generously offering £5 towards the same. It is proposed that the competition cover a term of three years, the exhibitor gaining the most points in that time to be the winner outright. There is no doubt that the remaining cash required will be subscribed. The trophy will be put into competition this coming season, and it is to be hoped that all Lizard fanciers will give their hearty support. Unfortunately, Mr. Bradley was unable to attend, but it is hoped he will be present at the next meeting, to be held at the Newmarket Hotel, Manchester, on Saturday, Aug. 15, to complete the rules for governing the competition. Subs. are now due. Mr. Moorhey, Broadbottom, was confirmed a member, and Mr. Hamilton, Glosop, was proposed. Friend Teddy is having a wonderful time just now. He says he cannot stop them from breeding. Most folk have a job to start them. Members are reminded that the colour for show cages is now azure blue for both Golds and Silvers, the enamel sold under the name of Victory Brand to be used.—John Rukin, Hon. Sec.

SOUTHAMPTON C.B.S.

Annual outing and ramble, July 15, when a party of over 50 members and friends, under the leadership of the hon. sec., Mr. W. L. Page, were conveyed by brakes to Rufus Stone, New Forest. After a splendid drive (about 12 miles), they did full justice to the excellent tea prepared for them by Miss Emery, of the "Sir Walter Tyrrell." The party then divided, some preferring to play cricket, others rambling through the Forest in search of bird life. Many who had never visited this part before expressed their delight at the grand scenery. The weather, which was dull at first, brightened up later, and at 8.30 a start was made for home, everyone voicing the wish that they could have stayed longer. Members congratulated the sec. on the excellent arrangements made for their comfort, and home was reached about 10.45 p.m., after a most enjoyable outing. W. L. Page, Hon. Sec.

SOUTHAMPTON P.P. AND C.B.A.

Outing July 8; about 60 members and friends started in the style for a brake ride. Over the river at Redbridge and through beautiful forest scenery to Bartley, then on to Panitons Park (thrown open to us by the kindness of Capt. Sloume-Stanley). We were met at the entrance by Mr. Prett, who has charge of the poultry on the estate, and is a member of our association. He got together a team to play a cricket match with us. The match was very evenly contested, a feature being the fine display of Mr. A. H. Smith, who donned the white coat as umpire for the fanciers, the Norwich wicket-keeping was also good. The result had to be a draw as the sun was setting and there was hardly enough light to enable Mr. Horne to photograph the party. Another delightful drive and we were all too soon at home with nothing left but memories of a thoroughly enjoyable outing.—G. J. Slade, C.B. Sec.

SHEFFIELD O.S.

Second ramble of the season, July 12, Derbyshire being the district selected. Unfortunately, owing to the unpromising aspect of the weather only a small number (20) turned up at the station. Nothing daunted, we took tickets for Dore and Totley as arranged, and we had no sooner put foot on the station platform than down came the rain. We had a wait at the station for about half an hour, and then it seemed to clear a bit. After a council of war it was decided that we should make the best of it, but the original route which was through woods and fields had to be given up, and we had to be satisfied by keeping to the roads. As it kept raining that fine rain which we know soon wets through, it was decided to make for the Cross Seythes, and there wait to see if there would be any improvement. After another half hour's wait we began to see signs of the clouds breaking, and the blue sky coming into view, and as it cleared we decided to proceed through by-lanes to Old Dore. The rain had now left off entirely and we saw no more of it. At Dore we made a halt for refreshments, and then proceeded on our journey, the prettiest part through the ramble. Taking a turn to the right we dropped into Rycroft Glen, and wended our way homeward midst the evening hymn of the birds, and the moths coming forth from their shady bowers; indeed a grand finale to a day that was anything but promising. Taking all into consideration we all had a most enjoyable time.—J. A. T. Woodhall, Press Corresp.

Singing Contests.

KNOTTINGLEY.

Time contest (five minutes) for Linnets, July 11, White Swan Hotel, with a good entry and some splendid singing: 1, Dyson, 102 sec.; 2, Rhodes, 56; 3, Bartley, 45.—J. W. Pearson, Sec.

Singing contest for Knottlingley Club members, July 25. Look out for big open singing contest, on Bank Holiday. Special prizes promised for time singing; make of note of this.

TYLDESLEY.

All England Linnet contest for time and quality, open to all, at Queen Hotel, Tylsdesley, Aug. 1. Prizes according to entries. Fee, 1s. per bird. Also members' contest, July 25, for time only, when we hope to see all our members bring their birds up for a trial; we are expecting to have a tea after contest, July 25.—F. Kennedy, Assist. Sec. (Advt.).

KIPPAX.

Members' sing, Headquarters, Commercial Hotel, July 18. 23 birds sang for three good prizes: 1, Bath; 2, Wallis; 3, Plows. The singing was only of a moderate quality, most of the birds showing signs of the moult.—A. Tomlin, Sec.

CASTLEFORD.

Linnet contest, George and Dragon, Bridge Street, July 18; 22 birds entered for four minutes' time singing for three prizes: Morley, 1, 118; Wainwright, 2, 84; Brindley, 3, 63. July 19, 18 birds entered for three prizes: Morley, 1 and 2; Brindley, 3.—J. Brindley, Sec.

LEEDS.

Quality Linnet singing, Albion Hotel, Saville Green, July 19. 17 sang for 3 prizes: 1, Johnson, musical box; 2, Hayes; 3, Wood. Judges, Sissons and Naylor.—Walter Naylor, Hon. Sec.

Questions and Answers.

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS

- (1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and conclude with either the correct name or a pseudonym.
- (2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query.
- (3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.
- (4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.
- (5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated on the left-hand corner of the query.
- (6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest.
- (7)—If an answer by post is desired from our specialists, a postal order for sixpence must accompany any query relating to sickness of birds, or a shilling in ordinary enquiries, with a stamped and addressed envelope in either case. Dead birds must not be sent to the office (see Post-mortems).
- (8)—All who desire letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence. All the fees received from this source will be handed over in full to the "Referee's" Poor Children's Fund (London).
- (9)—All queries must be addressed to the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Postcards are not admissible.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must, of course, be sent to the Editor.

Canaries.—Claude St. John, British Birds, Mules, and Hybrids.—H. Norman, Foreign Birds.—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Wild Bird Life.—H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc., of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Borders, Scotch, or any other variety of Canary, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his questions for answer to some leading specialist on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

A SCALY LEG (Dan).—You ought to have described the appearance of the leg as nearly as you could. Some birds naturally have coarser scales on the legs than others, and they also become coarse from age in some birds much earlier than in others. But your bird is not old enough to have very coarse legs from age yet, and having one leg quite smooth may point to something being wrong with the one that is so coarse. You may bathe the leg twice a week in a warm solution of boracic acid—a teaspoonful of the acid to a saucerful of warm water—for a few minutes each time, then dry, and gently rub on and between the scales a little sulphur ointment, finally wiping off all surplus grease to avoid the collection of dirt from the cage floor. Continue this for a month or so, and by the time the bird has moulted it will probably have trimmed off the undue coarseness itself, if nothing is seriously wrong.

GETTING A LATE BROOD (Fredk. Johnson).—Sorry, but I cannot hold out any hope of your succeeding in getting a brood of young this season. It is quite too late to start, and the moulting season is now getting so near that if you were to make the attempt and the birds went to nest, which is very doubtful, they would probably be overtaken by the moult before they had reared their brood, and in that case the young would almost certainly be deserted and left to die. You ought to have put the birds together about the beginning of April, or from then up to about the end of May. If the birds are fairly young and healthy, your best plan now is to keep them apart until next spring, and, if still in good health, and seemingly anxious to mate at that time, you may, if the weather seems settled and favourable, put them together at the end of March or any favourable time thereafter, which will give you plenty of time to get two or three broods from them next season. It would be impossible to enter into details of breeding in these replies, but you should get our manager to send you a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," post free for 7d., which will give you all essential details concerning successful breeding and management.

HEN WITH DIARRHOEA (H. Downes).—Get a piece of stale household bread and dry it in an oven until it is lightly browned all through. Then crush it or pass it through an egg mill, and use this in making the egg food in the proportion of a third part of the bulk, and finally mix in it a teaspoonful of arrowroot powder to each tablespoonful of the egg food, and sprinkle the whole with maw seed. Also add a teaspoonful of lime water to the drinking vessel each day. Continue this as long as there is any sign of the diarrhoea. You need not fear that the young will take any harm from this treatment.

MAKES A TICKING NOISE (B. E. B., U.S.A.).—The bird is doubtless suffering from bronchial trouble, and the first step must be to remove all the exciting causes of this. See that the bird is not exposed to any direct cold draughts, severe fluctuations of temperature, or foul heated air. Do not allow it to hang in or very near a window, near or over burning lights in the evenings, and do not hang it high up near the ceiling. Keep in a fairly comfortable and equable place, where it will have plenty of fresh pure air without direct draughts. Add as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence to the drinking water for three consecutive days, and after this give a morsel of bread and milk with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and sprinkled with maw seed every second day for two or three weeks, and on the alternate days give a morsel of banana and a pinch of summer rape. Give a spray of green food each day, and let the staple diet consist of plain canary seed. In the drinking water after the first three days add 5 drops each of tincture of lobelia, syrup of tolu, ipecacuanha wine, and sweet spirit of nitre every second day for two or three weeks, as may seem necessary.

BUFF ROLLER HEN (T. N. H.). I am not quite sure what you mean that the third clutch consisted of eggs no larger than a pea, or that these eggs contained undeveloped embryos of about this size. If the former is the case, then I should say that the hen is past her useful breeding career, as the reproductive organs have shown a marked deterioration through the season, and have not at any time been in a normal condition. In this case it would be useless depending upon her any longer, and your best course would be to discard her altogether as a stock bird. On the other hand, if the last clutch contained embryos it is just possible that she may be a late hatched bird of last season, and consequently somewhat immature during her breeding career this season. In this case it is quite likely that she will succeed much better next season. But it is too late to attempt any further breeding this year, and your best plan is to separate her at once. Turn her into a flight where she can get plenty of vigorous exercise, feed her fairly liberally during the forthcoming moult, and aim at getting her during the winter into a good hard and robust condition to start next season.

EFFORTS AT SWALLOWING (V. P.).—(1) I hardly think there is anything seriously wrong with the bird. The action you describe may be nothing more serious than a yawn, or the action which in birds compares with the human yawn, and this may be easily explained at this season of the year by the approaching moult, the effect of which is already being felt by many birds. You may try the effect of adding as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence to the water every second day for a week or so. (2) Sorry your acquaintance with the Bullfinch was so brief, but it is not always the case by any means. (3) I have no personal acquaintance with any place where pets are taken care of during the holidays.

YOUNG PLUCKING EACH OTHER (Ignorant).—It is not uncommon for young to pluck out each other's quills after the moult has commenced, and this is what is happening in your flight cage. The only thing you can do to prevent it is to separate the culprits; or the culprit, as it is sometimes only a single bird that has this vice. But when one has acquired the habit, it very quickly spreads among others by force of example, and I fear it has become almost general among your birds, in which case your only course is to cage them all up singly for the rest of the moulting time, and until they are all in perfect plumage again. If there are only one or two culprits at present, you may discover this on close observation, and you may find that these are themselves in the very best plumage, having taken good care of their own skins whilst plucking the others. In this case it may only be necessary to remove the culprits and the most badly plucked birds. It is essential to cage the latter separately until they are in good feather again, as their appearance will simply incite others to acquire the habit. Insects have little or nothing to do with this feather plucking, though they should, of course, be kept at bay as much as possible at all times.

VARIOUS (Stanley).—(1) The youngsters are certainly late in commencing to feed themselves, but this is of little moment so long as they are well attended to by the cock. Keep in the cage with them a small shallow box or saucer filled with plain canary, and place on top of this each day a teaspoonful of summer rape. Besides this keep in another saucer a little of the usual egg food mixed rather on the dry side, and each afternoon give a teaspoonful of cracked hemp. If these items are kept available you will doubtless soon find the youngsters helping themselves. Do not take them quite away from the cock until you see they are beginning to crack canary seed nicely. (2) No, it should not be necessary to take away the seed hoppers for a few hours daily to compel the birds to eat the colour food in order to get them a good colour. If the food is made of pure peppers, and palatable, practically all birds will eat voluntarily more than is really necessary to produce a good colour. Extra good colour is much more a question of colour breeding as a preparation for colour feeding, than one of forcing an unlimited quantity of colour food upon them. (3) There is so little advantage to be gained by colour feeding from the nest that I do not think it is very advisable, and in any case it is too late in most cases to begin now. It would be useless starting to colour feed the young in the nest after the plumage was partly grown. (4) No, colour feeding does not affect the song or throat of the bird in any way.

CLAWS AND EATING (Joey).—(1) You ought to have treated the claws as soon as you noticed that they were going wrong. You had better put on small rings for a short time as the initial treatment now. To make these, cut off rather less than an eighth of an inch from rubber tubing such as is used on babies' bottles. Pass the three front toes through the ring, and, holding the hind toe back against the leg, pass it on up the shank until it is nearly as far as the end of the hind toe reaches. Then leave it there and allow the birds to wear them for a fortnight or so. Then remove them and put in the cages thin and nearly round perches, just a little thicker than an ordinary lead pencil, and leave Nature to correct the deformity by the aid of these perches, which may have to be left in the cage for several weeks. See that they are conveniently placed, and secured firmly, so that they do not wriggle about when the birds are on them. (2) If the bird leaves only the husks of the seed in the hopper and eats the kernels, there is nothing at all to worry about. Many birds have this habit of dropping the husks as they eat back into the hopper. It is no indication of ill-health. If they reject the kernels as well as the husk, and you are satisfied that the seed is sweet and sound, give six drops of syrup of rhubarb in the water for three consecutive days, and after this four drops each of tincture of gentian and aromatic sulphuric acid for a few days.

CHANCING STOCK (Crest).—It is quite possible that the two cocks have been in good breeding condition, but this is hardly sufficient for successful breeding. The hen is a very essential factor, and unless she, too, is in the necessary condition, a good cock is only wasted upon her. There is no reason why these two cocks should not do very well for next season's breeding if they are still in the same good condition as now. But you would certainly do well to replace the hens, and try to get strong robust birds bred early in 1914, or 1913 hatched. If you knew any fancier friend with a strain of good feeding hens, it would be the wisest plan to try to replenish your stock from such a source, rather than to trust to chance to get good feeders from unknown sources. From November to February is the best time to buy stock.

YOUNG DYING (An Amateur).—There is something wrong with your feeding or food supplied, but I cannot tell from your letter where the error lies. What quantity of egg food do you give, and is it given very moist or dry? It is probably something connected with the egg food or the supply of hemp that is at fault. Has the hemp a nutty-white kernel, or is it stained brown? If the latter you need go no farther for the cause of the trouble. Keep the cages scrupulously clean, and also all the food and water vessels, and the food and water, too. Give an unlimited supply of plain canary seed, and place on top of it each morning for every three birds a teaspoonful of summer rape. For the same number of birds give separately every second day a heaped teaspoonful of egg food mixed rather on the dry side, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, millet, niger, black rape, teazle, and broken groats. No other supply of hemp is necessary at the age of your birds. Give in moderation such things as seed heads of shepherd's purse, plantain stalks, seedy chickweed, with an occasional spray of watercress. If there is any diarrhoea at present give a morsel of bread and milk dusted with carbonate of bismuth for two or three days. The yellow lumps at the base of tail you mention are probably nothing more than the oil-gland, which is a natural organ, and should not be tampered with. It probably has nothing whatever to do with the cause of the deaths.

SWELLINGS ON LEG AND WING (F. V.).—I cannot even guess what the swellings are from the description you give. It would have been helpful had you enclosed a little sketch, no matter how rough, to show the position of the swellings, and you should also have described their appearance as well as you could. Have the swellings only developed in the last week or so? Try painting them twice, with an interval of three days between, with tincture of iodine, and if this does not cause them to disappear, write again, and give the above particulars, when I will advise you further. Apply the iodine sparingly with a small camelhair pencil.

BREATHES RATHER HEAVY (M. Boon).—The bird may be a little over-fed for one thing, but you say nothing at all about your feeding. Try the following treatment, and if not successful write again in a month and repeat particulars, and also say how you have been feeding it hitherto. First of all well soak the feet in a warm solution of boracic acid—a teaspoonful of the acid in a saucerful of warm water—and carefully remove any clinging dirt or hardened accumulations of sand whilst bathing. Then dry and anoint them with a little zinc ointment, and if the claws are overgrown cut them back to a proper length. For one week limit the diet to plain canary seed with a liberal supply of green food, and add to the drinking water every second day ten drops of syrup of buckthorn. After this give half a teaspoonful of summer rape every second day, and twice a week on the alternating days a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and black rape. In the water after the first week add 20 drops of whisky, five each of ipecacuanha wine and oxymel of squills, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together, two days in every three for a week, and every second day for another week afterwards.

HEN DYING (Anxious).—It is not possible to say definitely the cause of the hen's death. Only a post-mortem could reveal that. But it looks very suspiciously like septic fever, and in that case the cock will have succumbed before this reply can appear, and nothing is likely to save it. Should it die after this reply appears, and you have other birds, I would strongly advise you to send the body to our Mr. Yates, as per rules under "Post-mortems," as soon as possible after death, in order to ascertain the cause of death without doubt, and at once remove the cage and all appliances that have been in use in it from the vicinity of the rest and thoroughly disinfect and cleanse them, exposing well to the influence of sun and air before again bringing into use. The eggs are probably useless by this time. The only thing you could have done with them was to have placed them at once under another hen about to sit on a small clutch; but if the death occurred from a virulent type of septic fever there would have been much risk in doing this, so it is perhaps best as it is. The nesting material should have been burnt.

MAKES NO SOUND (A. P.).—The bird is probably exposed to cold draughts, damp, or some similar exciting cause of this complaint, which will have to be removed before you can hope to do the bird any good. Keep it in a fairly equable temperature, which must be comfortable, but need not be specially warmed at this season. Do not hang it high up near the ceiling, nor near or over burning lights in the evenings, and strictly avoid the close proximity of a window, though the position should be a bright and cheerful one. In addition to the staple seed diet give separately every second day for two or three weeks half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with three drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it and sprinkled with gold of pleasure seed. On the alternate days give a morsel of banana, and add to the drinking water five drops each of glycerine, ipecacuanha wine, and sweet spirit of nitre. Give a spray of seeding chickweed, seed heads of damselflower, or the seedy heads of shepherd's purse each day. If not well in, say, a month, write again and I will advise you further. It is useless mating the bird in this condition.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

FEEDING HYBRIDS (L. Shaw).—Your letter arrived too late for insertion in last week's issue, and as you did not send your address it was impossible to answer by post. I gather from your letter that your hen was due to hatch last Friday, and if you have been fortunate enough to get young ones I presume you have given the hen egg food (as used to rear your Canaries), to feed them with. If she has started to feed them with this it would be a mistake to suddenly alter it to something different, so I would advise you to procure some best quality nuts' eggs and add a spoonful to the mixture, first soaking them in warm milk. At the same time get some insectile food as given to Nightingales, etc., and after a day or two add a little of this to the egg and biscuit, gradually increasing the quantity as the birds take to it and the young ones grow. If you have a garden, hunt round the rose bushes for green fly and scrape these off into an eggpan and offer them to the hen to feed with; if she takes them continue the supply, if not, just drop a few into the open beaks of the young ones; also tiny caterpillars and flies, and even the interiors of mealworms would assist the little ones immensely. Your supply of green-food should consist mostly of seeding grass and other wild plants, do not trouble about the green leaves, but just offer the seeding tops, both in a ripe and unripe condition. A spoonful of soaked seeds about twice a week will frequently induce the hen to continue feeding the young.

SEXING SKYLARKS (F. Johnson).—It is not an easy matter to sex young Skylarks, although I have found that the largest and brightest coloured are generally the males. You will also find that these are the top birds in a nest full of young. If you have the room I would advise you to keep them all until they commence to warble, which they do at a very early age.

BIRDS FOR AN AVIARY (Quill).—You will have no difficulty with the birds you mention; as a rule they live together very amicably; they may have little differences occasionally over the seed dish, but nothing very serious. If one of them should turn out to be particularly pugnacious you can easily remove him, but I do not anticipate your having any trouble.

PREPARING FINCHES (Miss Reeves).—There is no secret about preparing birds for exhibition, the main thing is to keep them healthy and in good condition without being fat. They should also be trained to run into the show cage and bear inspection from strangers. Do not be afraid to show them to friends and visitors; handle the cage frequently and move them from perch to perch with the motion of the hand. This training should be commenced while they are in the moult, as birds are much more tractable at that time. As regards feeding, a spoonful of good wild seed mixture about twice or three times a week, giving a little soaked teazle and rape on other days, will bring them into condition when required. Offer a liberal supply of sunflowers, particularly to the Greenfinch, but just watch him to see that he does not put on too much flesh; many a good bird has to stand back by the outline being spoilt in this manner. Now the bath is essential to high condition, and if your birds positively refuse to bathe you must spray them, but before doing so I would advise you to turn them into a good high flight with others, and then put in a bath on the floor of the cage; some are sure to take to it and frequently the others will follow the good example set them, when it is just possible you will have no more trouble. If you read your copy of "Cage Birds" carefully you will see from time to time birds upon exhibiting and preparing for show, that will assist you. Our little Nutshell booklet on "How to Mould British Birds," would positively contain a little information unknown to you.

MORE FINCH QUESTIONS (C. L. F.).—I am sorry I am not able to give you the information you require respecting the close season, as districts differ, but you can obtain the required knowledge from the nearest police station, where it is usually posted up.

(1) Some Finches can be caught with a bait, but a decoy bird is usually used, and is much more reliable. A good decoy will call a flock of birds down that are flying over; these would possibly pass if you had to rely upon the bait only. (2) The sweepings from barn floors are frequently used with success. If you can find a spot where a corn stack has been removed to be thrashed you will find scores of Finches and Buntings frequent the place for days, or even weeks, in the depth of winter; clear a spot and add a few fresh sweepings, and if you have any skill you should manage to capture some. The neighbourhood of water, where birds are known to drink, is also a good place. (3) When first caged the birds should be fed upon soaked rape, teazle, and canary, with dried seeds, including a little cracked hemp. Give them boiled water to drink. (4) Young birds as a rule soon settle down, but old ones are frequently too wild to manage; these after a fair trial should be given their liberty. (5) Your catching should take place before Christmas, if possible, and, anyway, not later than the end of January; the sooner they are taken after the moult the better. (6) If you have had no experience with Finches you will not find it a very easy matter to distinguish the sexes of Goldfinches. The cock as a rule has a flatter head and stouter beak, is larger, in blaze, and the wing butts are blacker and richer in colour. The blaze is the most reliable point, it should be expansive and go well past the eye. You should procure our Nutshell on the Goldfinch.

LINNET FOR SONG (Ignoramus).—The red colour on the head and breast of the Linnet is the breeding plumage acquired in the Spring of the year; they lose it again in the Autumn when they moult. Birds moulted in captivity come into breeding condition without getting red breast. There is really only one Linnet commonly called the brown Linnet. Very aged specimens are grey in appearance compared to younger ones. These grey birds have the true Linnet note, but are generally so wild that they are failures as caged birds. If you are fond of the Linnet's song you should procure young ones and hang them where they can hear good adult birds sing. (2) Redpolls in a wild state are red on the crown of the head, hence the name, "Redpoll." This colour they lose when moulted in captivity, the crown of the head becoming slightly golden.

BULLFINCH LOSING FEATHERS (C. J. Jarvis).—Dryness of feather is not unusual among caged birds, some being particularly harsh and lacking in lustre. I note your remarks respecting fruit and vegetable matter, but I am sorry you omitted to give me your seed diet. I do not think you can do anything for him at present, but I would advise you to be careful in your management of him during the moult, which will soon take place. Put him in the largest cage you possess, so that he is able to take plenty of exercise; give the bath frequently, which should be rain water, if possible; his seed diet should be as follows: Canary 2 parts, teazle 2 parts, rape and sound linseed 1 part each, and sunflower seeds 2 parts; a little hemp, maw, and niger three times a week. Collect all the wild seeds you can, such as dock, shepherd's purse, sow thistle, etc., and give a spray of ripe privet berries daily, or blackberries (ripe and unripe), for a change. Discontinue the scraps from the table. Give a small spoonful of Chemical Food in the drinking water twice a week. Boil the water first.

COST OF KEEPING BIRDS (J. Joyce).—Sorry I am unable to assist you to the cost of keeping all the birds you mention. I am afraid I have been rather remiss in keeping my bird expenditure account. All I know is that it is always more than it should be, as I am a believer in feeding them well. I would advise you to commence in a small way and add to your numbers as you feel you can afford it. You could not buy good insectile mixture under 1/6 per lb. suitable for Warblers and Nightingales. Larks, Blackbirds, and Thrushes could be kept somewhat cheaper, although I do not believe in stinting them. (1) It always pays to feed well. (2) You could not buy a Nightingale at the price you mention. You should add 10/- or 12/- to your sum. If a "Gale was caught now he would have to be treated off properly with mealworms, a rather expensive job, a dozen or two of which are of very little use; they would only whet his appetite for more. (3) Wire fronts are constantly advertised in "Cage Birds." Write to one of the makers for an estimate. You would find it cheaper and better than making them yourself. (4) The cages you mention would be admirable for Thrush or Blackbird. Two perches would be sufficient fixed on the back of the cage, about 7 inches from the floor. You could use sand for covering the bottom.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

BUDGERIGARS AND LOVEBIRDS (Topsey).—As regards taming, you must exercise patience and be very quiet and steady when attending to their wants, and steadiness will come with the Budgerigars, but the Grey-headed Lovebirds are very wild as a rule, and take a long time to steady down. It would be better to separate them, and then the Budgerigars will soon become fairly quiet. It would have to be a large cage for Budgerigars and the Grey-heads to breed in together. The Budgerigars will give but little trouble. Put in a couple of husks, supply them with white millet, canary seed, and a millet spray—as much seeding and flowering grass as they will eat while it is in season—also regular supplies of grit, cuttlebone, and water. Budgerigars in a state of nature hate by rolling amid wet grass and herbage, and if you can give them a small turf of longish wet grass occasionally they will use it as their bath. The Lovebirds would do better if given a small barrel, and you must supply them with leaves, thin strips of bark, which they will carry into the barrel and arrange to their liking when in breeding condition. The Budgerigars require no nesting material. Your book will tell you all else. Bulbuls are almost legion, and I do not know which species you are referring to, but they do not breed freely in captivity, not even in large aviaries. The Gold-fronted Green Bulbul is a gorgeous bird and a fine mimic; it has not yet been bred in captivity. Value about 50s. each.

TO FLY WITH CANARIES (Chemist).—There are quite a number of foreign species which should do well with your Canaries, flying loose in the room. You must furnish the walls of the room with plenty of twiggy branches as perches, rush nest, husk, small hoxes, and wicker travelling cages as nest receptacles. Long-tailed Greenfinches, Goldfinches, Gold-breasted, Orange-cheek, St. Helena, and Grey Waxbills, Grey and Green Singing Finches; Rufous, Zebra, Diamond, Alario, Cuba, B.b. Pectoral and Bichenov's Finches, Bronze, Rufous-backed and Magpie Mannikins, Common and Green Avadavats, Cordon Bleus, Firefinches and Bengaloes. You could put in from twelve to fifteen pairs. You must add white and Indian millet and millet sprays to the seeds you supply—these seeds will do the Canaries no hurt if they take to them. Flowering and seeding grass is much appreciated by foreign Finches generally as green food.

CHINESE AND JAPANESE BIRDS (M. A.).—I do not care to give these at such short notice; in a catalogue birds of all nations are grouped together under their respective order and genera. There is the Pekin Robin, Japanese Redbreast, the beautiful little White-eye (Zosterops). Not very many birds from the countries named find their way to the English market, but I will give you a fuller answer next week. In the meantime, write again, informing me whether you have means of getting them sent over or if you want merely approximate dealers' values.

PARROTS AND LORIES (Pretty Polly).—I am not allowed to recommend any special dealer; you must watch our columns or put an advertisement in yourself as wanting them. Le Vaillant's Amazon, 40s. upwards; Purple-capped Lorry, 50s. to 60s.; Haw-headed, very seldom to be obtained, 28 to 410; Yellow-naped Amazon, 50s. upwards. All are robust species once they have got over importation troubles. Re your Blue-fronts, it really needs a strong steel and iron aviary for these birds, but there would be a reasonable prospect in a cage, say, three feet square at base and from four to five feet high, with a barrel hung up in the top of same, and also several stout branches for them to climb about on.

WILL THEY WINTER OUT OF DOORS? (E.C.).—If your county is not a northern one, all the birds you name should safely pass the winter out of doors. Having a north aspect, your aviary would be greatly improved by having some glazed shutters, or even bass matting, placed against the ten feet of light front that adjoins the shelter, but this, of course, would only be required during the winter months. The Ortolans ought to breed in such an aviary, but none of the Buntings are free breeders in captivity. The incubation period varies from thirteen to fifteen days. Pleased to note the Pekin has recovered.

MADAGASCAR LOVEBIRDS (J. W. Lloyd).—Put one teaspoonful of Dineford's Magnesia into the drinking water daily till the bowels have been well moved, but as soon as there is any sign of the evacuations being watery, the laxative must be stopped, and put in the water half a teaspoonful of Byno-phosphates daily till the birds become normal. On all warm, sunny days put the birds outside, but not in too exposed a position, either as to wind or sun. Put a millet spray into their cage once or twice a week, and supply grit regularly. In the aviary I found this species ready to eat lettuce and seeding grass readily, but the centre fleshy stem should be removed from the lettuce leaves.

BUDGERIGARS (H. E. A.).—Apple, paddy rice, are quite wholesome for these birds, and it certainly will not hurt them if they take a little pigeon corn. It is best to keep up a continuous supply of food for small birds; nevertheless it is a good practice to let them eat supplies right up, but within the hour the supplies should be renewed. Get our Nutshell, "Budgerigars," 2d., post free from our manager, and you should then be in no doubt as to dietary. Give them as much seeding and flowering grass as they will eat. If in any part of the aviary there is sheet lead which they can get at and nibble, this would account for the trouble. The next similar death that occurs, send the body to our Mr. Yates (see rules) for post-mortem examination, with full particulars, then when you get his reply cause should be apparent, and we can suggest a remedy. Budgies are certainly as hardy as Sparrows.

AUSTRALIAN GREY PARROT (Novice, South Wales).—(1) No. 2 The Rose-breasted Cockatoo is advertised by dealers as "The Australian Grey Parrot." It has the underparts mostly rose-colour, the head and face white, blushed with pink; back grey. (3) I have heard good talkers of this species, but they are the exception rather than the rule; the majority do not talk much, many not at all; but, if you get a young bird, and once it's tame, pet it and make a companion of it, and talk to it, etc.; there is no reason why you should not succeed in training it into one of the few talented individuals which occur among Roscates.

GREY PARROT (Regular Reader).—This feather-picking is a vice, and once the bird becomes confirmed in it, the habit is seldom entirely given up. The sample mixture is a very poor one, unless you sent us what the bird had already picked over; it also contains some items the bird would be better without. Get the following: One quart each canary, white millet and oats, one pint each hemp, dard, paddy rice, and sunflower seeds; half-a-pint of pea nuts and a gill of chilies. Well mix and keep a supply regularly in the cage. Also supply biscuit, stale crusts, ripe fruits, ad. lib., nuts in variety, and keep continuous supplies of grit, cuttlebone, and pieces of wood for it to chew up, in the cage. You must not use a metal drinker when giving drugs, with the exception that every fourth day will be sufficient for the magnesia, and on the intermediate days put half-a-teaspoonful of syrup of phosphates in the drinking water. Persevere with the treatment given in previous reply and report progress in a month or six weeks' time.

QUAIL EGGS UNDER PIGEON (M.B.L.).—No, this is all wrong. The pigeon can't feed them; they run about like chicks as soon as hatched. A fillop feeder will be no good. The eggs should be put under a Bantam hen (a Silky does as well), and she should be allowed to brood them as she would her own chicks—live and dry ants' eggs, live gentles, some good make of insectile mixture, and canary and millet seed. The young soon develop; the small coop and run containing the chicks should be placed on grass if possible, and its position moved almost daily.

DOUBTFUL GENDER (W. J. G.).—(1) You do not say whether the supposed cock which you now think is a hen has ever sung or not, or whether there were any indications of sex during the period of mating. I think it may be just as likely that you were mistaken yourself in thinking the sexes were reversed, and that the one you took to be the hen was really the cock. However, if you allow the bird to sit its full time it should, together with the test of the mating of the other bird with the fresh cock, clear up matters. (2) If the 8-year-old Yorkshire is in good sound health and active, there is no reason why it should not breed successfully with the hen that is now sitting, or you might mate the fresh roller cock with her, as you suggest after the other hen, if such it proves, has gone to nest.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

W. T. East.—Bird was impossible of examination after dissection, it had undergone decomposition. If you care to send another I will examine it.

Mrs. Ruby Shaw.—Acute inflammation of the bowels induced by the ingestion of some irritant material partaken of with the food. The bird was otherwise healthy, with no suspicion of infectivity.

Mrs. M. H. Ashkam.—Fatty degeneration of the liver and spleen very advanced. The heather had nothing to do with its death; it could not have lived long under the circumstances.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Jacko.—It is not exactly common, yet at the same time it is far from rare for Linnets in captivity to moult out all white, or more or less white, in plumage. A large number of such instances are known.

Puzzled.—The bird is an Ortolan Bunting, a European species, sometimes found in England. Feed on plain canary seed; for detailed reply see answers to British bird queries next week.

J. Loveday.—We will have drawing made and publish it next week.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the state-ments made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the Depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is re-tained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing his receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending them.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the de-cision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full com-mission does not accompany the deposit, the ven-dor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

Instructive Books for Bird Lovers.
 The authors, all well known experts in their various subjects, have in each case endeavoured to give in an easily understandable manner, the methods to be employed in reaching success in that particular branch of the cage-bird hobby dealt with. This list comprises a set of books of unique value to bird-keepers. There is all the experience of years of careful study at the disposal of our readers. The books are based on the hard earned knowledge of men who are recognised as the first authorities, and they are able to tell in a conclusive manner all the interesting "ins and outs" in their respective subjects.
AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS, AND CAGES, 2/3 (cloth gilt).—By H. Norman. Contains ten lovely full-page photographic plates. A practical guide which deals thoroughly with the proper Building, Fitting, and Management of Aviaries and Bird-rooms, and the making of Cages.
YORKSHIRE CANARIES, 1/11.—By H. W. Baitje (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Absolutely the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.
NORWICH CANARIES, 1/11.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.
THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Boulton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kitchin, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/-, post free 1/2.
PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.
SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2.—By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.
HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.
BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.
FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/11.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc., Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.
BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts, Part 1: "Hardbills," and Part 2: "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.
THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—By G. E. Weston. Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.
BIRDS OF THE COUNTRYSIDE, 5/4.—By Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. A handbook to the wild life of all our familiar British birds; their appearance and habits accurately described. With 12 beautiful coloured plates, and 118 photographic illustrations. A charming gift book.
PETS, AND HOW TO KEEP THEM, 5/4.—By Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. Gives the correct method of housing, feeding, and managing every kind of pet; all sorts of animals are dealt with—monkeys, dogs, cats, lizards, tortoises, also gold and other fancy fish, while there is a large section devoted to birds. Contains many coloured plates and photographs. Another charming gift book.
CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete work in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge; (associate editors, G. E. Weston and C. A. House). Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.
CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.
COLOR FEEDING OF CANARIES AND OTHER BIRDS, 3/6.—By J. W. Ramsden. Tells you how to mix the colour-food, and how to moult the birds to get the richest possible colour.
"CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL."
 A wonderful sixpennyworth of birdy literature. See announcement on Page 21.
FANCIERS' PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memos, with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 5/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

HARRY ALLEN, THE ORIGINAL LINNET KING

Notice! I guarantee all my Rollers I send out cockies. They are bred by myself and there is no finer blood in England, and they are taught under my well-known champion Canary. All cocks guaranteed, 4/6; a few singing nice, 5/6; travelling cages 8d. extra; these Rollers won all before them last year. Try one. Linnets to moult out sure winners for the bench, 2/- each; Linnets from the same place as the champion Linnet of the world, 1/- and 1/6; a few singing grand, 2/-; these are without doubt the largest and best singing Linnets in the world. I had the pleasure of being at Cawood on the 13th of July last, near Selby, where I caught the champion Linnet of the world. I was speaking to the farmer there and he cordially invited me to his house. I have sung many hundred songs in the village, and I am very well respected there. Cawood for the Linnet is like Germany for the Roller, and they are the largest Linnets I can find, without a doubt, in England. Linnets taught by the world's champion, with new cage, and my book of secrets, 3/6; a few with quality notes, right for catching or contest singing, will sing anywhere, 4/6; they call them musical boxes, and they win all before them. Larks, singing nice and low, 1/- and 1/6; they are good birds. A few that will make champions, 2/-; beautiful Lark cages, fit for any room, 1/6; beautiful Linnet cages, 1/6 each, 16/- a dozen. Real yellow cock Greenfinches, like paint, sure winners for the bench, 1/6; young yellow cocks, will moult out winners, 1/- each; cock Brambles, 1/6; Redpolls, 1/6 pair; best Birdlime in England, 1/8 lb., 10d. half, 5d. quarter; if you can find better throw mine away and I will return your money. Best Linnet and Canary whistle in England, 6d. My book of secrets is the best book published of its kind; it tells you the proper rules of contest singing and how they sing at contests, and the proper time for each pair of birds to sing; how much you pay entrance fee, and how much the worthy host should add to it; how to make Linnets sing at one another with their wings down, and how to moult them and how to train them for contest singing; how to make Nightingales, Larks, Thrushes, and Blackbirds sing with full loud voice in five days; how to save the Siberian Goldfinch and the English Peartree Goldfinch from dying. It tells you the proper food for each bird; it has saved thousands of birds their lives. This book will be sent by return for 1/-. Thanking you all for your kind patronage: Harry Allen, The British Bird Champion, City Aviaries, 40, Beckett-st., Leeds. (1707)

MISTAKES BIRDBREEDERS MUST AVOID.

A most seasonable article. Alone worth the small amount asked for the whole book. Mr. St. John's thoroughness in answering queries on the subject of Canary breeding is well known to the majority of our readers. This article, written in the author's best vein, gives in detail mistakes in bird breeding which must be avoided by all who would make the greatest success of their hobby. Besides this highly instructive article, it also contains the following:—

- STARTING A COLLECTION OF CHEAP BEAUTIFUL FOREIGN BIRDS. By F. Meakin.
- HYBRID BREEDING IN OUTDOOR CAGES. By G. R. Pippet.
- A HANDY GUIDE TO BIRD MEDICINES, AND THEIR USES.
- THE SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF BRITISH BIRDS.—By F. Terry.
- DIRECTORY OF THE JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS.
- SEEDS AND THEIR USES. By W. Holbden.
- HOW TO PROFITABLY BREED BUDGERIGARS. By W. H. Gibb.
- SOME SIMPLE METHODS OF BIRDCATCHING. By J. W. Steel.
- A YEAR WITH THE WILD BIRDS.—By H. Norman.
- MY METHOD OF BREEDING CANARIES. By E. T. Sheppard.

£1,000 ACCIDENT INSURANCE COUPON. In addition to this wonderful budget of bird literature, this marvellous little handbook also contains numerous sketches and art plates, and also

SAVE YOUR YOUNG BIRDS.
JUST now, when the young Canaries are leaving their parents is a most critical time. Hundreds of birds are lost at this season owing to the lack of knowledge of their owners. "Our Canaries" tells you how to recognise any serious symptoms that may develop in your young birds, and how to quickly restore them to health again. Delays are dangerous, so be wise and have "Our Canaries" near at hand to consult at once. "Our Canaries" gives you all the most successful and profitable information about Canaries, from the nest to the show bench that it is possible to know. Everything is clearly explained and easy to understand.

What Two Delighted Purchasers Say—

"Worth Double the Price." "Sure it is Honestly Worth the Money."
Dear Sir, 149, Marston Road, Stafford.
I received the volume, "Our Canaries," last Saturday morning, and I am very pleased with same. From what I have already seen of it, it appears to me to be the very best Volume ever published on the subject. The coloured plates are all that could be desired, and the print excellent for reading. The Volume, in my opinion, is worth double the price asked, and I think every fancier should grasp this opportunity of getting one on the terms offered.
Yours truly,
ELIE ORRILLARD.

Dear Sir,
I received Volume yesterday, with thanks. I consider it a fine book; it is just the thing for the novice, as it contains much useful advice. I am sure it is honestly worth the money you ask for it. I will show it to my friends that are in the Fancy.
I remain, yours faithfully,
J. W. KELK.

Club Reports.

BINGLEY O.S.

Show, July 25, Assembly Rooms, Mr. L. C. Casey, Bradford, judged. Class 1: 1, 2, 3, Butterworth and Hardy; 4, Craven. Class 2: 1, Craven; 2, Allen; 3, 4, Townley. Class 3: 1, Bailey; 2, Townley. Class 4: 1, Butterworth and Hardy; 2, Priestley; 3, Craven.—H. Shaw, Sec.

STANLEY (Victoria) F.F. & C.B.S.
Meeting, July 19th. Decided that we nominate our secretary, Mr. W. Elliott, for a seat on the Board of Management of the above club; voting will take place on Friday and Saturday nights, July 31st and August 1st, and Sunday morning, August 2nd. I hope all members will attend and record their vote, as our secretary is running in the interests of the society.—R. Peart, Chairman.

NORTHERN NORWICH P.C.

Meeting, July 22; Mr. R. Tindale presided. New members made: H. D. Pyman, West Hartlepool; J. Stephenson, and W. Priestley, Boldon Colliery. Decided that champion cup be won twice in succession or three times in all before becoming the property of exhibitor. Sec. was instructed to purchase young bird cup from Fattorini and Sons. We are giving a novice trophy to be won outright in one year, also medal for second most points, two highest birds only to count for novice trophy, so here is a good opening for any novice who cares to join us.—F. W. Laidlow, Sec., 55, Colston Street, Benwell, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

PROVINCIAL ROLLER C.G.

Meeting, July 25; Mr. Massey presided over an average meeting. Patronage in the form of medals was again granted to Bradford, Wakefield, and Bolton Shows. Annual contest fixed for Nov. 27 and 28, probably in Manchester. Enquiries are being made for a suitable hall. The meeting appointed Messrs. Waring, Massey, Kilshaw, and Tomlinson, to judge at Annual Show. It is greatly to be regretted that so small an interest in the affairs of the P.R.C.C. seems to be creeping over the members, when such important business as the Annual Show is left to be discussed by eight members, all of whom travelled some distance. It is hoped that in future members will make every possible attempt to be present.—A. Percival.

NATIONAL GREEN-MARKED Y.C.C.

Meeting July 18, Market Tavern, Bradford, Mr. W. A. Cowgill chair. Messrs. H. Chew (Leeds), J. E. Pyrah (Morley), A. Whitley (Bradford), and W. Bingham (Sheffield) elected members. Prizes for the various competitions during the coming season were arranged as follows: Open competition, 1st prize the N.G.M.Y.C.C. trophy value £10 10s., and club medal value £1; 2nd the W. A. Cowgill trophy value £5 5s., and club medal value 12s.; 3rd the Edward Clegg trophy value £3 3s., and club medal value 8s.; 4th pair boots presented by Mr. J. Chippindale; 5th special value 10s. 6d. presented by Mr. H. Hill, special (value to be arranged later) to most points with 3rd birds, Mr. J. W. Ramsden's special; money specials as last year for 4th and 5th birds. Amateur competition (for members who have not won three firsts in open classes) special value £1 1s. presented by Mr. L. Dykes; 2nd value 15s. by Mr. E. Hattersley; 3rd value 10s. 6d. by Mr. J. Bailey. Junior competitions for novice members: Prizes competed for in novice classes at all Y.H. shows where Green marked classes are provided; 1st sp. value £1, 2nd value 15s., 3rd value 10s. presented by the club. Decided that the N mark for novices in the Year-book now in preparation be omitted. Intending members should send in their names at once for inclusion in same.—J. Chambers, hon. sec.

ROTHERHAM C.B.S.

Meeting, July 25, Mail Coach Inn, Mr. B. Bailey chair. Decided to have 8 Yorks., 8 Nor., 4 Brit. classes, 2 Selling, 1 For. Mr. White, Tinsley, elected a new member. It is to be hoped that members will turn up to the meetings better than they did at this meeting, as we shall have plenty of work to do now to get ready for open show, and to make it a success. Everyone will have a chance to do a little toward it.—Taylor and Bailey, Secs.

PORTH AND RHONDDA VALLEY.

Meeting, July 25, at headquarters. A good muster attended and a good amount of business was got through. Mr. J. H. Baker was elected a member. Decided that Sec. keep a record of members that attend meetings and register same. A club also formed for a visit to the next Crystal Palace show; members wishing to visit same can do so by paying a small subscription each week. Next meeting headquarters, Aug. 8, at 7.—J. S. Jones, Sec.

NEW CROSS C.B.S.

At last meeting, July 2, it was decided that owing to so many members being away on their holidays, the August meeting be abandoned. Next meeting, therefore, Sept. 3, when we hope all will endeavour to be present. Points gained for the points cup: Champ., Burton Bros., 105; J. S. Fairman, 98; F. Lacochee, 57; C. E. Gunnell, 32; Rev. H. A. Soames, 23; W. A. Hall, 21. Novice: J. Fuller, 130; H. J. Joplin, 78; W. H. Gardner, 63; A. Weston, 59; W. G. Martin, 45; T. Kay, 41; J. W. Ford, 34; H. C. Humphries, 33; J. Williams, 30; P. Cooper, 28.—Burton Bros., Hon. Sec.

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S.

Meeting, July 21, Headquarters, Reindeer Hotel, Rye Lane. Mr. L. J. Richardson, chairman, gave a lecture on colour-feeding. He particularly pointed out that it was necessary to give the birds a preparation before commencing colour-feeding, so as to clear their system. Hot Natal pepper was not necessary until half way through the moult, as in his opinion young birds' stomachs are not strong enough to stand it. Olive oil he uses when mixing the food, which keeps a fine sheen on the bird's plumage. Shutting down is a great thing amongst many breeders, but he thought darkening the window was equally as good, as the birds get air, and are subjected to more natural conditions of the room. Many members took part in a discussion which followed, and there were not many who feed alike. A hearty vote of thanks to the chairman was carried unanimously. Mr. Richardson replied, and a very pleasant meeting closed. (No meetings in Aug.)—A. G. Cant, Hon. Sec.

The Shows.

SMALLBRIDGE C.B.S.

Young Bird Show, July 4, Mr. A. Howarth judged. LIZ.: 1, 2, Coupe. CL. YELL. YORKS.: 1, 2, 3, vhc, Coupe; 4 Blackburn. BUFF.: 1, Blackburn; 2, 3, Coupe; 4, Bamford. TKD. BUFF.: 1, 2, Coupe; 3, Bamford; 4, Howarth. TKD. BUFF. NOR.: 1, Howarth; 2, Lord. YELL.: 1, 2, Lord; 3, Howarth. A.O.V.: 1, spl., Tonks; 2, Weadle. BRIT.: 1, spl., 3, Weadle; 2, Hartley.—J. T. Cheatham, Sec.

BEDFORD.

Second N.F. show, headquarters, July 23, when a very nice lot of young Norwich faced the judge, Mr. H. Markham. Special mention must be made of Mr. Osborn's four first prize birds, which are a great credit to the breeder. CL. BUFF. NOR.: 1, Osborn, very typical, good size, and rich col.; 2, 4, Corrie; 3, Gentle. YELL.: 1, 2, Osborn, very typical, lovely qual. and col. not much between; 3, vhc, Corrie; 4, Notley; he, Beandlan. BUFF.: 1, 2, 4, Valentine, stylish, good head and nice body; 3, he, Hudson; vhc, Crawford, many fanciers thought this bird should have won; c, Simons. JUNIORS: 1, 2, Thompson.

COVENTRY (Godiva) C.B.S.

Young stock show July 18, Plough Hotel, Queen Victoria Road, when 102 birds were put through their paces by the judge. Norwich were well up to the average in numbers, not forgetting size, shape and quality, and a few of these will be heard of later on. Yorks were down in number, but there were some nice youngsters on view, but Cinnamons looked as if they had been to a suffragette meeting. The A.O.V. class was a good lot; 1st and 2nd were two typical Cinnamon mks. Nor., 3rd being a clear Crest-bred. The old bird classes were well filled, and the birds were looking well after doing their duty for the season; we noticed one old clear yellow hen which we have known for more than ten years looking as well, if not better than some of the young ones to-day. She has successfully bred again this season. British were few. Mr. T. Gilbert (Coventry) judged, and gave entire satisfaction.

NOR. CLASS 1 (9): 1, 2, Rowley; 3, vhc, Wright; he, c, Saunders. CLASS 2 (11): 1, Shirley; 2, Cox; 3, Saunders; vhc, Wright; he, Roycroft; c, Rowley. CLASS 3 (14): 1, 2, Wright; 3, Arundell; vhc, Shirley; he, Fletcher; c, Saunders. CLASS 4 (17): 1, 2, 3, Roycroft; vhc, Wright; he, Arundell; c, Shirley. YORKS CLASS 6 (2): 1, Rowley; 2, Saunders. CLASS 7 (4): 1, 3, vhc, Rowley; 2, Saunders. We have still two vacancies for our patronage, writes Mr. J. Huntington, sec., Cumberland and Westmorland Y.C.C.A., 19, Nelson Street, Maryport. Secs. please apply early.

Mr. J. W. Dalzell writes that he has removed from 4, Ormerod Street, Oldham, to 96, Barker Street, where he has opened in the Bird and Seed Trade, and will be pleased to see old and new friends.

Mr. Bert Benton, East Palestine, Ohio, U.S.A., who is a lover of Canaries and Canary breeding, would be glad if Mr. David O'Brien, of San Francisco, would send full address, so that he might correspond with him.

Members please note, write Messrs. Jamieson and Johnson, Secs., Derwent Valley C.B.S., we are postponing our meeting of Aug. 1 to Aug. 8, and hope that all members and intending members will be present at same. Subs. due.

Mr. J. Nicholl, 327, Bowling Hall Road, Bradford, writes that he has taken over the secretaryship of Bowling and Dis. B.F.A., and will be glad to hear from anyone wishing to join. The society is moving to new headquarters, the Napoleon Hotel, Wakefield Road.

I should like to know the address of Mr. Frank Ball, writes Mr. G. H. Ball, 39, Percy Road, Woodford Halse, near Byfield, Northants. About two years ago he lived in Hartley Road, Radford, Nottingham, and was a bird fancier. Could any Nottingham bird fancier oblige?

Mr. Alex. Donnelly writes that he has taken over a business at 295, Swinton Hall Road, Pendlebury, and says: "I have sold all my Canaries, but am still keeping on with Linnets, and I will still keep up my interest in the Bird Fancy. I have no room for my cages in my new business premises."

Will all those who have received schedules for the Woodlands Show, Aug. 3, note, writes Mr. G. Hunt, hon. sec., Doncaster C.B.S., that an error has occurred in same, re cup rules, viz., for the best Canary or Mule, or Hybrid bred 1914, confined to members of the Ardwick-le-Street, and Doncaster and Dis. C.B.S.

We have received the year book for 1914 of the Provincial Roller C.C. It contains a list of officers, balance-sheet for 1913, which shows a loss of nearly £12 on the year, the balance of £25 18s. 2d. brought forward being reduced to £13 18s. 6d. cash in hand, the rules of the club, members' names and addresses, and the judging standard.

Messrs. Liverine Limited, of Grimsby, the proprietors of Desiccated Yolk of Egg, write that they wish, through CAGE BIRDS, to thank the many fanciers who have sent them kind words and wishes. One large breeder writes this week: It fills a long felt want and will do all you represent it to do at a minimum cost. The proprietors add that they have an output for the white of the egg, and that nothing this was so the price of the Desiccated Yolk of Egg would be double. It will bring the birds through the moult, producing at the same time a brilliant plumage. The process of fanciers boiling their own eggs is now out of date.

"Bird Notes," the journal of the Foreign Bird Club, appears now in a new cover, bearing pictures of various foreign birds. The opening article in the July issue is a short account, by Mr. H. Whistler, of the Rufous-bellied Niltava in its wild state. Mr. S. Williams continues his account of his Weavers and Whydahs. Mr. W. Shore Baily tells of the breeding of Hybrids between a British Greenfinch and a Sikhim Siskin, and gives a photograph of the nest and eggs. Other interesting breeding accounts are of the Alexandrine Parakeet, by Mr. Baily, the Blue Sugarbird, by Dr. Lovell-Keays, the Mealy Rosella by the Rev. G. H. Raynor, and Rosate Cockatoos by the Marquis of Tavistock, the latter in the continuation of the articles, "Some Experiences of Cockatoos." Mr. W. T. Page continues "An Easter Tour Among Members' Aviaries," and Mr. Whistler, the "Birds of the Jhelum District," illustrated by a drawing of the nest of the Purple Sugarbird. Some nice photographs embellish an interesting issue.

Mr. George Siddown, hon. sec. Ilkeston C.B.S., writes that his society has been compelled to alter its show date from Nov. 28-30, as originally announced, to Dec. 5-7.

£2 for Lost Parrot.

A reward of £2 has been offered for the recovery of a Grey Parrot which escaped from the houseboat River Home, moored in the Thames Ditton reach of the Thames.

A New Hybrid.

In the Editorial Notes of the July issue of "Bird Notes" there is an account of the successful pairing of a cock Fieldfare with a hen Missel Thrush in Major Johnson's aviary at Hove. Two fertile eggs were laid the first time, but owing to an accident to the nest they were not hatched. The eggs are described as being "a complete mixture of the egg of the two species." At the second attempt three eggs were laid and one chick was hatched.

A Cheering Message.

In connection with the serious illness of the veteran judge, Mr. J. F. Hills, of Sudbury, recently reported in CAGE BIRDS, on the initiative of Mr. J. F. Dewar, of Edinburgh. Mr. G. Crabb has sent to Mr. Hills a joint letter of sympathy, and of hope for recovery. This letter was signed by nearly 50 of his personal friends in the Fancy, composed mainly of the older fanciers. (We have heard from a friend that Mr. Hills was greatly delighted and cheered by the message.—Editor.)

Two Cases of Fertile Mules.

In the July issue of "Bird Notes," the Editor, Mr. W. T. Page, records that two lady members of the Foreign Bird Club have records of fertile Hybrids. Miss E. F. Chawner reports that she has a Grey Singing Finch-Linnet Hybrid cock, the mating of which with a hen Linnet has resulted in the production of two young birds which are now fully fledged; and Miss Smyth had one young bird from a Red-headed Finch cock and a hen of the Red-headed Finch-Cutthroat cross; this young bird, however, lived only three days.

OBITUARY.

Master Herbert Ludbrook.

It is with great regret, writes Mr. W. Helliwell, Sec., City of Bradford O.S., I hear of the sad loss our most esteemed treasurer, Mr. F. Ludbrook, and his wife, have sustained in the sudden death of their son, Herbert. They have the full sympathy of every member of our society in their great sorrow.

Mr. J. W. Turner, Grantham.

It is with deepest regret, writes Mr. H. Lowther, Hon. Sec. Grantham C.B.S., that I have to announce the death of our respected member, Mr. J. W. Turner, better known as "Bert," who died at his home in Grantham, July 23. I offer, in the name of his brother fanciers of the Grantham C.B.S., our sincere sympathy to his sorrowing wife and relatives. He was a keen fancier and loved a good specimen of any variety, and at all times wrought hard in the best interests of the society.

Through the Cage Bars.

Giving evidence at Steeple Ashton in regard to a charge of keeping young Goldfinches in captivity, an inspector of the R.S.P.C.A. related how he saw three young Finches in a small cage, and while questioning the defendant observed two adult Finches in the vicinity of the house. First one and then the other bird approached the cage and passed morsels of food through the bars to the expectant fledglings. He learned that the young birds were taken from a nest in a tree in view of the cage.

Sparrow wrecks a Taxi-cab.

A Sparrow at Higham, near Gloucester, has been responsible for a serious taxi-cab accident. In a ditch seven feet deep were found a wrecked taxi-cab and its dazed driver. When able to speak the driver said that all he could remember was receiving a severe blow in the eye. Inquiries led to the discovery of a dead Sparrow at the bottom of the steering-arm, and the only explanation of the accident is that the Sparrow flew into the driver's eye, rendering him insensible, with the result that the cab swerved and ran into the ditch.

To Society Secretaries, Advertisers and Correspondents generally.

It would much facilitate our work if Secretaries and others would kindly write out their club reports, notices, etc., in the style in which they see them printed. Write on ONE SIDE ONLY of each sheet of paper used.

Will all correspondents, and secretaries and officials of societies in particular, please note that CAGE BIRDS now goes to press on Wednesday afternoon, so that all matter for publication in our issue of the same week MUST reach us on TUESDAY TO BE CERTAIN OF INCLUSION.

Mr. H. Howick, of Midhurst, and his noted Canary Bullfinch Hybrid with some of the fine trophies it has won him. The bird was bred by Mr. Howick, and an account of its wonderfully successful career on the show bench will be found in a letter from him which is published on page 42.

Fancier and Crack Rifle Shot.

It may be of interest to your many readers to know that Mr. Jas. L. Dewar, who won the King's prize at Bisley, is also an enthusiastic bird fancier, and a member of the Colinton and Currie Parishes O.S., writes Mr. Jas. Napier, the Sec. Crests and Norwich Plainheads are his favourites. I am sure all bird fanciers will join the members of the above society in congratulating Mr. Dewar on his splendid win.

Massacre of Sea Gulls.

A correspondent of the "Yorkshire Post" says that after a recent destructive hailstorm in the estuary of the Tees, he counted 300 dead Gulls within a quarter of a mile of Redcar jetty, lying in groups of from six to twenty. They had been slain by "lumps of ice," most of the birds having wounded heads and broken wings. It has since been found that thousands of Sea Gulls were destroyed by the enormous hailstones.

TRAINING AND CONDITIONING BIRDS FOR EXHIBITION.

A lecture by Mr. B. Clegg before the Ardwick and Manchester C.B.S.

Meeting and lecture by Mr. B. Clegg held in the St. Thomas's Schools, Ardwick. A large number of members and friends being present, Mr. Boothman in chair; usual business was gone through previous to lecture. The lecturer expressed his pleasure in coming before the members of the Ardwick and District C.B.A. I was asked to give a lecture, he said, the subject was to be "How to get Birds in Condition for the Show Bench." I was pleased to know the nature of the lecture was selected and not left to me, and I will now do my best to handle it. I will start on the moult. You are all aware the best conditioned bird is one which has had a good moult, and while it is going through the hopes of every fancier run high, anticipating a good moult for the young birds, and the good fortune of having something that will bring credit to him when the shows come round; even with the older birds he is looking forward to them having even a better moult than they had the previous year.

You must at all times carry out the moult under the best conditions, not as a good many do, that is, put them altogether in a flight cage and moult and colour them. He strongly advised those present to select the best birds they would require, as these should have more attention than the others. After the second week of moult cage them off separately, as in colour-feeding you will have to shade the light. Some darken the cages with paper, others darken the window or run a blind across the racks. It does not matter which method you adopt so long as you do shade the light after selecting those which you will need for the early shows.

A Recipe for a Tonic.

Probably about this time you may find some of your birds are down in condition, now you must study your birds and try to ascertain the cause of them going out of sorts. Perhaps a tonic will pick those ailing birds up. There are several tonics which fanciers use, but a very simple and good one which I have used for 20 years is the following: Saffron two pennyworth, cochineal two pennyworth, sweet nitre ½-oz., honey ½-lb., tincture of capsicum ½-oz., rum or whiskey 8 ozs., water up to three pints. This tonic would last the season through, as only a little is needed in the drinkers, and it would also keep good; he had found this to be very beneficial in almost any case of birds being down. Some used sulphate of iron, others tincture of gentian, tormentil root after the moult was also a good pick-me-up. Birds are the same as ourselves, one medicine is good for one and not for another. Of course, we must study them and experiment until we found out which was the best to use.

Getting the birds ready for exhibition, he stated, was a very serious matter, as some birds needed more training than others and unless a man has plenty of time it is of no use going in for some of the varieties. With Yorkshires, for instance, a man would have to spend a lot of time training them, running them into the show cages to get them steady and also getting them in that position which takes a judge's eye so much. You must get them well up and strengthen their legs by careful training. A good method is to tie a piece of string to the top of the cage or even a sprig of dandelion or water-cress, by this you will not only get position, which means that half the battle would be won, but you would also get better wing and tail carriage. This would make the Yorkshire what it is noted for, viz., a bird of position.

The Norwich was more a bird of type and colour, and did not need the same training as the Yorkshire, as its position seemed more natural to the breed. This variety seemed more for the working man as it did not need the time. Other birds of type and colour mentioned were the Lizards and Cinnamons, but he was sorry to say they seemed to be sinking, for they were birds which gave a lot of interest to those who took them up and they were not expensive.

Showing Brings in £2 Weekly.

The lecturer said that if a man wished to be successful he should belong to a society which was composed of working men, as he believed they gave more attention to the breeding and showing of birds and had made the Fancy what it was; still he could not do without the moneyed man, as we needed these to buy our stock, and we should encourage the capitalists to come into our societies so as to assist us to get along. He knew an exhibitor who made £2 per week showing birds he had bought from working men. If we did happen to have a bird worth £6 or £7 he would advise us to sell it, as it would assist us as well as the purchaser. (There is a certain amount of risk and should anything happen he could better afford to lose than us.)

Regarding showing, he did not believe in doing too much with one bird; he thought three times during a season was enough, especially in Manchester where the air is so dirty. Some fanciers were able to moult a bird clean and show it without washing, but this he had found to be impossible in Manchester. The wash was one of the main things, and he was a great believer in washing demonstrations to educate the members. To improve the sheen on the birds he advised us to use a small quantity of glycerine in the water; of course, this would need a lot of practice to get to know the quantity to put in. For washing purposes he had found Sunlight soap, with a little borax in the water, and glycerine in the rinsing water to meet all needs, but he always made a practice of grooming his birds with a silk handkerchief. This, he thought, brought that beautiful sheen and that closeness of feather which we all so much admire. After touching on several British birds and giving some good hints the lecturer concluded, leaving us a short time for questions. Several were asked and answered in an able manner, and a vote of thanks ended a very instructive and interesting lecture.—R. BOOTH, Press Correspondent.

Getting and Keeping Canaries in Show Condition.

By J. HODDER, London, E.C.

Hints From One of Our Best-Known Exhibitors.

I THINK it will be admitted by most breeders of Canaries that however good in show points a bird may be, if it is shown out of condition it is not likely to do its owner much service on the show bench; one cannot help noticing early in the show season some exhibits possessing all the characteristics necessary for the make-up of winning specimens, and yet they are passed, and why? Solely because they are out of condition, and do not show themselves to advantage. How frequently we hear at shows such remarks as these: "He appears down in condition," "Hugs his perches," "Does not move well," etc. Now all this is summed up in the one word, Condition; these birds lack condition, and to remedy this should be the exhibitor's earnest effort.

Why the Birds Are Late.

Let us briefly examine a few of the causes why birds do not answer the requirements of their owners early in the show season, and to do so it will be necessary to commence with early spring. We will suppose the show season is over, we may have had all our spare time for months taken up with the shows, exhibiting the birds and following up their doings; possibly we have not met with the success we anticipated, and we have become a little disheartened. Then our fervour is diminished, and our interest wanes perhaps, so the birds are left to themselves a little more than usual. Of course, we attend to their ordinary daily wants, but we may not be so keen as we ought to be, so we give the birds less time and thought; and this just at a period of the year when we should display greater enthusiasm; and so time passes along; pairing-up time approaches, the birds are paired, but we are not at all satisfied with results; then we become dissatisfied with our stock, and perhaps resolve to dispose of all and make a fresh start. Yet all the time the birds have not been to blame, but ourselves only, and the trouble dates back to that day on which our enthusiasm abated.

Believe me, the successful exhibitor is the man who devotes all his energies to getting his birds into the highest condition by the time the show season begins. In the management of his stock before pairing, during breeding operations, and after, he should be keeping in his mind the possibilities of a successful show season, for it is there and then the true fancier reaches the summit of his ambitions when he sees the reward of his labours—possibly a beautiful specimen exhibited, the admiration of his brother fanciers, his toil and plodding has brought him unbounded happiness in the knowledge of the fact that he has produced a bird which has brought him credit, and given pleasure to others. Therefore keep up your interest throughout all the year; you will be amply rewarded for all your trouble.

Another cause of disappointment during the show season is late breeding when the second week of July is with us. I do not consider it a wise course to allow the birds to continue breeding. I knew some will say, "But you see I have had a poor season up till now, and there is yet a chance of hatching and rearing a few," but from personal knowledge I gather that the possibilities of making good a poor season are at this time of year remote; the birds are now tired, and if anything is hatched the chances are that there will be difficulty experienced in rearing it. Even if reared, late hatched birds are generally puny and weak, at least this is what I have found, so is it worth the risk of breeding from your best specimens when they ought to be resting, and gathering strength for the moult?

Ending the Breeding Season.

I prefer to let all nests where young are hatched by middle of July get fully reared, and not allow any hen to sit again after that date; part all the pairs one by one as the young commence to do for themselves, placing the hens in batches, say, of six or more, according to cage room at your disposal, but cage off all the cocks singly; the hens will generally agree well, but the cocks will not agree until the moulting sickness seizes them, then they can be removed into moulting cages in batches and kept on colour food until the completion of the moult. All birds that are intended for show should be kept together, if possible, during the moult.

Late breeding often proves disastrous; what frequently happens as a consequence of late breeding is this: The birds get so thoroughly tired and worn out that many valuable birds die towards the end of July. The first symptoms of the approaching trouble are that they mope about the cage, pick over the seeds, eating but little; they appear as though there is little life left in them, then we begin to administer restoratives in the form of some tonic or something else, but to our dismay we suddenly discover one day that one or more have gone to the great majority. Then perhaps we become angry with ourselves because we were not sufficiently observant to have avoided such a catastrophe. Be it remembered that I am dealing with causes why birds are not in show condition when the time arrives for the exhibitions to begin.

The successful exhibitor always has his thoughts concentrated on the future as well as the present, and so handles his stock at all times that the best results are obtained at any period of the year, whether it be breeding time or showing time.

Assuming that we have the right stock, the earlier the moult the better, i.e., if we have an ambition to score at early shows all birds should be showing signs of the approaching moult by the middle of August, and those that are not should be helped with cochineal or saffron in drinking water. We are all glad, or should be so, when the moult starts early, and if the birds have the necessary reserve of vitality to carry them through it expeditiously we shall soon see the feathers leaving them in large and still larger quantities; this augurs well for a speedy and successful moult, and upon this depends very largely the bringing of the birds into condition for showing at the proper time.

The Moult and Colour.

When birds have a protracted moult they are nearly always flat in colour and down in condition just at the time when you require them for exhibition. I consider that birds should never be handled during the moult, for if handled much the moult is retarded; while if they are allowed to remain in absolute quietness they will come through the ordeal much more quickly.

Assuming the moult is over and the birds are beginning to "fine down," as we say, then you will need to watch them most carefully; some birds give trouble to their owners at this time my dropping some of the new feathers. If detected in time this trouble can soon be overcome by giving some kind of blood-enriching tonic in the form of iron in the drinking water, this also serves to bind the colour. When these symptoms have vanished, just modify the diet a little, and instead of colour food every day give a little ordinary egg-food with, say, 4 drops of cod liver oil emulsion and a few drops of chemical food mixed with each small teaspoonful, also a little maw seed sprinkled over it. This simple treatment speedily brings about a marked improvement in their condition, and puts a lovely sheen on the surface of the plumage.

The careful fancier will soon see when this kind of treatment must be discontinued by the general appearance of the birds so treated; of course care must be exercised not to overdo it at this period, but the strain of the shows will soon tell its tale on their constitutions, then it will be time again for you to resort to your mode of special treatment. Some fanciers bring their birds into condition with mixed seeds only, but I prefer to practice both methods.

I make up a mixture of gold of pleasure, a little linseed, a little niger (inga), maw seed, best German summer rape, and a little hemp; about a teaspoonful of the mixture is given on the days when the egg food and emulsion and chemical food are not given, not forgetting a little ripe apple. You will, with this treatment, soon have your birds full of life and go, and ready for the shows.

The "Soft-Moult" Nuisance.

In a recent lecture I dealt briefly with the appearance of soft moult about November, and sometimes later, but perhaps a word or two here again may be appropriate; one cannot help noticing at some shows the number of birds which are down in condition and casting their feathers when the show season is about half over. This is most distressing, both to the birds and their owners. There is no doubt that the trouble is brought about by frequent showing or the varying temperatures to which the birds are subjected, and I notice that it is the novice birds which suffer most in this direction.

Now I have only one object in mentioning this, and that is to help and encourage the novice, therefore I would tell him that if he will only anticipate this trouble another season, and treat his birds in the simple way I have described, i.e., after every show give his birds some kind of tonic in the form of tincture of steel, syrup of hypophosphates, or chemical food in drinking water, and also feed for a day or two as advised for birds finishing the moult; if this mode of treatment is persevered with, a soft moult will never be a cause of trouble again.

Let us always remember that soft moult is injurious to the birds' constitutions, as it imposes an additional strain on them, besides ruining them for shows for weeks, or perhaps the remainder of the season, and I would further state that in my own experience I have never known of a hen being of any use in the breeding room during a season following that when a soft moult had occurred. I have found syrup of hypophosphates, as mentioned above, a most excellent remedy for all birds showing signs of the wear and tear of much showing. I trust these remarks may prove of some assistance to the amateur or novice, and that by following out the advice here given success may be achieved.

BEFORE giving a few notes on the recent nesting of this charming species, the Sikkim Siskin (Chrysomitris spinoides), in my aviary, perhaps I may be permitted a few words of explanation, which may make my object more intelligible. In the first place I should like to point out that I am not competing for any of the medals or prizes which our Editor has so generously offered. This is not because I in any way undervalue the honour of winning one—and more especially the first one—but simply because those of us who try to interest others in that which is best in aviculture must be careful that our own motives are above suspicion; I may add that I have also refused all the medals which the Avicultural Society has kindly awarded me during the past two years.

For the above reason the rules with regard to giving notice and as to the length of the written account have not been observed, but all the other rules have been complied with, and especially that with regard to adding the corroborating testimony of a witness, which I regard as very necessary and valuable—indeed, I may add that I myself suggested it. Without wishing to say anything disparaging about other records, I have always held the opinion that without corroboration there can be no real record; in fact I may go further and say with great regret that I fear that one at least of such "records," which I personally investigated, was simply a flight of the imagination.

Breeding Birds in Cages.

Whilst on this subject I should like to make it quite clear that the idea of giving a medal for species bred for the first time in a cage must be credited entirely to Mrs. Warren Vernon; I merely passed it on to our excellent Editor, recognising its great possibilities, not only in view of the fact that so very many bird-lovers have no space for aviaries, but even more because the general public, though generally ready to admit that birds are happy and contented in large aviaries, refuse to believe that cage-life can be even tolerable. If, for instance, we tell them that more than half-a-century since the Nightingale was successfully bred in a cage, they would probably refuse to believe us. My hope is that we shall now be able to give them definite proof of what can be done even with delicate insectivorous species in cages. If the excellent scheme of CAGE BIRDS achieves this result, every aviculturist in the land will be under an obligation to it.

The Breeding of the Sikkim Siskin.

By W. E. TESCHEMAKER, B.A.

An interesting first occurrence in English Aviculture.

Far away up in the Himalayas, where the stately deodar rears its noble head and the great silent forests ring with the weird laughter of the White-crested Jay-Thrush, you may see the Sikkim Siskin flitting from tree to tree—a gleaming flash of gold against the dark background of the gloomy conifers—and you may hear its clear piping call-note. Then perhaps other little gleams of gold come into view, not quite so brilliant these, their breasts streaked with dark brown—one, two, three, four, a family party. Though some writers on avicultural subjects indulge in verbal rhapsodies in their efforts to depict the beauty of a bird on the show-bench, we cannot get away from the fact that, to realise the real beauty of any bird, one must see it in its natural surroundings. Let us go to Nature, and let us observe that, whereas we have only a few types of cages, in Nature almost every species has a quite different and characteristic background. We shall not be far wrong, I think, if we associate this particular species with the deodar, because Hume tells us ("Nests and Eggs of Indian Birds") that this tree forms its favourite nesting-site.

I have had one or two (but not always a pair) of these Siskins in the aviary ever since 1903, but they have done no nesting until this season. Perhaps the clear sunny days and very cold nights of this exceptional spring have supplied the something that was lacking in the conditions of their captivity, for I hear that in at least one other aviary a hen Sikkim Siskin has nested this season, having paired with a cock Greenfinch and reared one Hybrid. In this connection it may be not uninteresting to remind our readers that, when discussing this species under the heading of "Recent Arrivals from Abroad," I pointed out the similarity of its note to that of our Greenfinch, and also suggested that possibly the reason that a certain proportion of those imported had not done well was that they missed the bracing air of their homeland.

However, I am hoping that a breeding strain has now been established, for both my pairs have reared all their young this season, and have reared them without the least difficulty; it would be very satisfactory if one could say definitely that a new and really suitable species had been added to the number which will prosper and breed in our aviaries. The more I see of aviculture the more convinced I am that we should try to breed in captivity more of the birds which aviculture requires.

Eclipses Our Own Beauty.

This Sikkim Siskin is a far more beautiful bird than our European species. The whole of the forehead, throat, rump, breast and underparts of the male being a brilliant golden yellow, the wings widely banded with old gold, and the flights most artistically tipped with a clear grey-blue. The female is very similar, but duller. In its homeland this Siskin is said to breed quite late in the year (July and August); but quite early in January I saw the male of the pair in the winter aviary displaying, crouching low on a spare bough with his wings and tail extended to their utmost span, in which position he looked very like some gorgeous tropical butterfly. A charming little nest was built at the end of February in the top of a quonymus, about eight feet from the ground, very compactly constructed of moss lined with fine grass and a few feathers. The four eggs were light blue, with a few black spots on the larger end, and were much larger than those of our Siskin, the one in my cabinet measures .75 x .58 in.

The four young were hatched on the 25th April and flew on the 6th May, on which day I brought one into the house and made the following note on its plumage: "Crown and back buffish, each feather with wide central dull brown stripe, giving a mottled appearance; cheeks light brown; over eye and under cheeks, chin and throat pale chrome; wings blackish, greater and lesser coverts margined with buff; anterior base of all primaries and secondaries bright yellow, forming a bar across the wing; a wash of dull grey on ends of secondaries; tail blackish-brown; all tail feathers with buff margins; breast pale chrome, boldly streaked with brown; abdomen and under tail-coverts light chrome; beak and feet pinkish."

Shelter Ignored.

The other pair, which had wintered in the breeding aviary without any shelter whatever, went to nest about a month later and laid three eggs, of which I took one. They hatched and reared the remaining two. The nest was in the fork of a Pinus insignis about three feet from the ground. The male of this pair went into the moult on the 1st June, but had completed his moult and was singing again by the 5th July. By the 1st July the young of the early nest were changing colour rapidly, showing much more yellow on the throat and forehead, especially the young males.

The song of the Sikkim Siskin is not of much value; nevertheless it is bright and cheerful, and heard throughout the year, and the bird itself is not only brilliant, but in perpetual motion, and is in every way suitable for aviary life. I can quite believe that the young could be reared on seed alone; nevertheless, I supplied groundsel for the first brood and the second brood were largely reared on the roots of grass.

My friend and neighbour, Mr. P. F. Wolfe, saw the second brood in the nest on the 24th May, and Mr. C. Harrison, of Tiverton, has seen both broods flying and independent.

KEEPING AND BREEDING FOREIGN SEED-EATERS IN CAGES.

By WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., &c.

NO matter how few birds are kept, there should always be several reception cages, all of the box type for the reception of new arrivals. The first to transfer the birds to (I am speaking now of birds not larger than a Canary) should only be about 12 inches long, 9 inches deep, and not more than 12 inches high; here the birds may abide for about seven days, to rest after the troubles of importation and the subsequent land journey. Put in the cage suitable sreed, with only a light sprinkling of sand over the cage tray, and a tin of warm milk in lieu of water; the milk can be diluted with boiling water to give it the required temperature (three parts of milk to one of boiling water); add one drop of brandy to the fluid ounce, and then leave your birds alone for a couple of hours at least. The temperature of the room they are placed in should be rather high and dry, but the atmosphere must not be stuffy.

A Period of Rest.

The next day water can be given the birds just tepid, and containing half-a-teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia to the fluid ounce of water; in the afternoon give milk again as above, and then follow on with water containing a little Byno-phosphates till the birds become established, but it will be an advantage to let them have a drink of milk as above, in the afternoon of most days for the first week. This first week is to be a period of rest, and the birds had better be left undisturbed, save when attending to supplies and cleaning cage.

At the end of the week transfer them to a cage a little larger, say eighteen to twenty inches long, the other proportions about as in the small cage; here they may spend another week, being gradually introduced into a lower temperature, and given plenty of fresh air, but they must be kept clear of chill winds and draughts. Here they may remain for a week or ten days, being gradually brought on to the full diet for the species. By the time this period has elapsed they should be ready for the cage that is to be their home, which has already been described earlier in this article. During this resting period they will have acquired activity, the full use of their wings, and also confidence; and all should go well with them.

Formidable as this may seem while reading the directions, it really means very little trouble in practice, and many a bird will be saved by proceeding on some such lines—birds are not fit for a really roomy cage when first taken out of the travelling box, they are scared and weakened by the journey, and still more badly scared if put straight away into a really large cage; they huddle away in corners, and only the strongest survive.

An Incident in Proof.

I can illustrate my point by quoting an instance; I received this week some Purple Sunbirds, the day after their arrival in port, and still in their travelling cage, each bird being in a small compartment. They were cleaned and fed, and left in their travelling cage for another day. Then they were transferred to other cages and treated on the lines given above, for the same treatment applies to both soft- and hard bills, and now every bird looks like living, and all are becoming really smart; yet, when first run out of the travelling cage they were cramped and scarcely able to walk.

With some species, i.e., if they appear very badly scared, it is well to hang a piece of an old lace curtain in front of their cage for the first few days, till they settle down a bit. In the case of any sudden collapse, put them into a small cage, with a soft cloth or a little hay on the bottom of cage, and place them in dry heat, even 80 degrees or more is not too much, and keep them there till properly revived; then gradually, not suddenly, bring them back into a lower temperature. To write further would be superfluous, and I pass on to our next section.

Breeding Hints.

When birds are noticed to be building, they should be left to themselves as much as possible and the necessary attendance carried out as unobtrusively as possible—it will be quite possible to observe them from a little distance, and if one sits without much movement, observation can be kept sufficiently close for all the doings of the birds to be distinctly visible.

Birds are mostly secretive in a state of nature when engaged in family cares, and if we can keep up this fiction, or get as near to it as we can in our cages, it makes success more probable. Therefore surround the nest receptacles in the cages with sprays of heather or broom that will give the idea of a retreat, and you will find that many hens will not leave their eggs while food supplies are being put in or even while the cage is being attended to. Even Canaries avail themselves of such retreats, if given the choice of a screened or an unscrceued nest-box.

When young are hatched, it is of the first importance that a liberal dietary be supplied. Even with such a free breeding species as the Zebra Finch, which will rear its young on seed and greenfood alone, it is wise to be more liberal, for many young Zebra Finches have been lost for the lack of a little live food at this period. We must bear in mind that though seed-eaters, the young of the Fringillidae are almost entirely raised upon insect life, especially in the early stages.

Many are so situated that insect life is not easily obtained; well, live ants' eggs, gentles, as well as mealworms are all to be obtained from bird-food providers; the mealworms always, the others in their respective seasons, which is mostly when they are most wanted. However there is another substitute which is always with us, that is preserved ants' eggs; procure the best ants' eggs obtainable, and steam the required quantity just before supplying to the birds. I have reared numbers of Cutthroats and similar species upon preserved ants' eggs so treated.

Half-ripe and Soaked Seeds.

Greenfood again is an important item in the rearing of many Fringilline species, and it should be supplied fresh at least twice daily if possible. I have dealt with kinds in a previous instalment, but if these be procured with the seeds in a half-ripe condition, such should be largely supplied to the birds.

Soaked seeds are also a help, especially with pairs which are bad feeders; but it must be borne in mind that such soon ferment and become sour, so that only immediate requirements should be so treated. It will suffice if the required quantity be put into a dish over night, and sufficient boiling water poured over them to well immerse the whole; the following morning all water should be drained off and the seeds shaken about in a cloth, so as to dry them sufficiently to prevent the seeds clogging together into a mass.

The average incubation period with the Fringillidae is 13-14 days, but this is a little variable, and so as to be all covering it may be put as 12-16 days; climatic conditions affect the period to some extent. In my aviary I have found 12 days the usual period in moist, hot weather; extreme dry heat appears to slightly lengthen the period, and in some instances to spoil the eggs.

Homely Remedies.

I am not going to treat of bird ailments here, but often taking a slight ailment in the beginning will check serious trouble, and save many valuable birds. Anything more than this must be treated as for individual cases, and not in a general way. The following may well have a place in the fancier's medicine cupboard:—Dinneford's magnesia, byno-phosphates, Friar's balsam, whisky, and a mixture of ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills and glycerine in equal parts.

A close watch should be kept upon caged seed-eaters against constipation, and at the first sign of this a little Dinneford's magnesia should be put into the water to adjust matters. Dinneford's magnesia may also be used as required as a check upon obesity, but in no case must it be used of sufficient strength or so frequently as to set up a state of chronic diarrhoea. For birds needing a little toning up use the byno-phosphates, half a teaspoonful to the fluid ounce of water will suffice for the Finch tribe. This can be given regularly so long as the birds require it. Friar's balsam is useful in the case of accidents, or necessary amateur surgery, a little applied with a camel-hair brush will soon stop bleeding.

Whiskey or brandy in a little warm water is a good stimulant to birds suddenly requiring such—one or two drops in a teaspoonful of water is sufficient. For slight colds the mixture named above usually gives relief providing the case is taken in time—one part of the mixture to ten of water I have found about right for the class of birds we are considering. Of course there are many others which can be used for the same object, but I have found those named to answer the purpose admirably, and no good purpose would be served by enlarging the list.

Keeping Trouble at a Distance.

With ordinary care, cleanliness, sweet and wholesome food, thorough ventilation without draught, and a close watch upon the birds during the period of the moult, will mostly suffice to keep disease at bay. When slight indisposition occurs it will be at once apparent to the real bird-keeper, and a use of homely remedies, as above, at once, will usually meet the case.

My concluding instalment will be "A few representative successes."

(To be concluded.)

An Object Lesson in Wild Seeds.

SIR,—Owing to removing from Rothesay I have had several letters delayed from societies, etc., wanting to loan my collection of wild seeds. Those who have not heard from me should kindly communicate with me at 253, Thorn Place, Blackness Road, Dundee, when I will send on the collection by return. I wish CAGE BIRDS every success.

JAS. B. CLARKE.

Never Say Die!

SIR,—Reading CAGE BIRDS, I got to page nine, where it is mentioned about young fanciers, when a stroke of bad luck comes, throwing the sponge up. Well, now, that struck me as very funny. This is my first year, and I have had five nests, some with clear eggs and others with young, which did not come out of the shell. At last I thought that I would buy a few youngsters, just to satisfy myself. Believe me if two of them did not get away. I captured one with a sack which I had in my hand. The other flew away into a tree. I climbed the tree, then just as I got up he flew on the top of a house. I went up on the roof and got scratched all over, while the wife called me all the monkeys she could. Don't you think, fanciers, that I have had a bad start? But I don't intend to give up; I am going to try again, and hope to have better luck next time.

Railway Clearing Houses for Derelict Birds.

SIR,—In seaport towns birds in cages are often left in railway station parcels rooms and not called for again. Possibly the returning traveller's joy at reaching home again oversteps the limit, and he forgets all about it until he reaches his destination, and then does not trouble to write for it. The birds are kept for three months, the same as everything else. For ten days they are kept in the parcels room at the station, and after this time are kept in the store. Birds, by the way, are the only live stock that railway companies will take in as parcels. The birds are put up for sale for what they will fetch, at the quarterly sales of derelict parcels, but as these sales are not advertised very widely they are not much attended to, and the general public, and the birds and cages go for a mere song, being often sold as an item in some lot that includes most incongruous articles. The Post Office also handles many derelict birds in the course of a year, though as a rule for short periods only. This is due to some accident with the labels during transit, as birds will not be accepted for transmission unless they are properly labelled. The birds are invariably claimed by the owners when their absence has become known through non-delivery at their destination. In the East End of London is what is known as the "Russian" market. This may be said to be the clearing house for derelict birds, as birds of all descriptions picked up at furniture sales, and in many other ways, are offered for sale here each Sunday, on which day the market is at its busiest. The amount of haggling that takes place over a sale is surprising. Neither the sellers or the purchasers seem to be well posted in the value of the birds, and the business resolves itself into one asking as much and the other offering as little as they dare. The purchasers are usually women, who are adepts at "cheapening" goods.

Training Linnets for Contest Singing.

SIR,—In reply to "Novice" on how to train Linnets for singing contests, if he looks through the adverts. in CAGE BIRDS he will find plenty of those who advertise books on training Linnets. I would also advise "Novice" to get your "Nutshell" booklet on Linnets and their treatment, for it is a real good book. "Novice" will find that to get Linnets fit for contesting he will have to spend a lot of time with them and try various kinds of seeds, as one seed will bring one bird on fierce song and not another. If "Novice" will put his name to his letters I will send him a seed recipe worth having, though I don't wish to publish my name on account of trade. I am winning every week with my birds with the seeds I use, and what I get elsewhere to feed them on (from other seed dealers).

Correspondence.

The "Order of the Push" at Abertillery.

SIR,—I thank those gentlemen who last week kindly gave their opinion, but should have liked to have seen the names of those who were writing the letters. Still, perhaps they have done best, or they, too, may get trodden on. I do not intend to let the matter drop. Any reasonable person can see that I have been treated worse than a dog. Most of the members have seen my appeal, and I hope in the near future to have this matter thoroughly gone into.

A. E. MOULE.

SIR,—As Secretary of the Abertillery C.B.S., please allow me to defend the society. Fanciers at large have heard only one side of the case. I shall state the other side, and the truth. Mr. Moule says that there were only six in the committee meeting of July 8; I wish to tell him that there were eight, and that seven voted to expel him, and one was against. (Not five to one as he stated.) Also there were 14 in the monthly meeting of July 11, when eight voted to expel him, four for him to remain, and two stood neutral. (Not seven to five and one neutral, as he stated.) I think we should speak the truth when it is published in the Fancy Press. I can give every name of the members present, also who voted for and against. He says he was thrown out in five minutes; I can prove it has taken about three months. Now, fanciers, the reason Mr. Moule was expelled is this: The Society has not been able to have a meeting when Mr. Moule has been present, without it has been all of an uproar from beginning to finish. We picked a deputation on April 24 to see Mr. Moule as regards his conduct at the meetings. He promised the deputation he would act differently. This promise he failed to fulfil, except at the first meeting after they waited on him; this meeting being the only one the chairman has had the chance of ruling as it should be ruled. I may say that when a member addressed the chair and was on his feet speaking, Mr. Moule would interrupt, and would not listen to the chairman. It had come to this: Mr. Moule behaved so in the meetings that I am so at the ten m. I could have left the society if Mr. Moule had not been expelled. What would other societies have done with an individual upsetting the meetings and ridiculing the chairman? On behalf of the Society, I remain,

H. H. MORTIMER, Hon. Sec.

[A letter from Mr. Broome, the late hon. sec., bearing out Mr. Mortimer's remarks, is unavoidably held over.—EDITOR.]

SIR,—"Ebbw Vale" has rightly stated the case when he says that Mr. Moule is worth the whole lot left. Mr. Moule has at various times collected something like £20 in cash, which, I am sure, means work, and to work like this means that he is interested. Mr. Moule is a fancier of sterling worth of whom any society might well be proud, but, unfortunately for him, is of an inquisitive turn of mind. He asked a lot of questions, and he liked to probe things to the bottom. Now I think all will admit this is an Englishman's right especially in this democratic age. I am sorry to say Mr. Moule is not the only fancier that has had the "Order of the Push" from this Society, whether from the same cause or not I am not prepared to say. But, Mr. Editor, if we are not prepared to act above board, it is time to close any society, and write upon its tombstone "Ichabod."

The Great Career of a Noted Canary-Bullfinch Hybrid.

SIR,—As I think this may prove of some interest to the many readers of CAGE BIRDS, I enclose a photo of my noted Canary-Bullfinch and myself, together with some of the trophies the bird has won in this last two years. I must say he has been very successful on the show bench. He has taken twenty firsts and four seconds in twenty-six times out, including 1st at the Crystal Palace in 1914; also a £1 cash special at the Crystal Palace, 10s. cash special at the Portsmouth and Southern Counties show, and a diploma of honour in CAGE BIRDS' Championship Competition, with only three coupons. He has also won twenty other specials, including the Portsmouth fanciers' 25-guinea challenge cup, the Gmkilford C.B.S. cup, and the Chichester C.B.S. cup, all three for best cage bird in each show. Many thanks for hints from CAGE BIRDS, and I wish your paper all the honour it so honestly deserves. The photograph is by G. T. Spring (Mildhurst).

From Field to Aviary.

Sir,—The other day whilst out for a stroll I came across a nest of young Greenfinches, about ten to twelve days old. I caught the old hen and took her and the young home with me. I put them all into an aviary. They had not been in above half an hour before the old hen began to feed them. She is feeding them yet, and all are doing well and look as if they are contented.

A Linnet that Returned Home.

Sir,—Reading in last week's CAGE BIRDS of a homing Thrush, and the previous week of a homing Bullfinch, perhaps the following case of a Linnet returning home might be of interest. On Wednesday afternoon last (July 22) whilst feeding two Linnets I keep on a window-sill outdoors, I had the misfortune to leave one of the doors open and one of the birds flew off and, of course, I gave it up as lost. The next afternoon a neighbour called my attention, much to my surprise, to a bird flying round the cage of the other Linnet. I looked out and saw it was my lost one returned. I put out the cage he had been kept in, and within ten minutes he went in by himself and never moved whilst I opened the window and shut the cage door. I think this very remarkable for a Linnet, seeing it was a field-moulted specimen, and I consider one of the difficult birds to steady down to cage life."

Judging Norwich Plainheads to the Standard.

Sir,—I was rather amused when I read in the correspondence columns (which are most interesting) the complaint of "Norwich Standard." At the same time I felt somewhat sorry, saying to myself: "Here is another disappointed exhibitor," and had he not signed himself "Norwich Standard," I should have come to the conclusion that he had expected to see a Border Fancy Society's Nest Feather Show! He is undoubtedly either a raw novice or is trying to have a rap at the judge. I was a visitor to the show, and I can tell him that if he has any Norwich smaller than the largest he saw at Gorton, he must not build any hopes of getting very high up the ladder of fame in the birdy world with them. If anything beats a good little one it is a good big one; and don't forget that young are like a flower in bloom—there and gone in a few days. With several fanciers that have had a life time experience, I passed a remark about the shortness of the "ungainly creatures," that our friend has called these leading birds. I am sure the type and quality throughout were something for the society to be proud of, and only in one class would I have changed the decision of the judge. But never mind lad, have another try, and don't mix the Borders with the Norwich.

SIZE, TYPE, AND QUALITY.

How's this for Hybrid Breeding?

Sir,—I have had sixteen eggs from a cock Goldfinch and hen Greenfinch this year; fourteen eggs were fertile, one was clear, and one she dropped from the perch. I had ten young ones hatch out from the fourteen eggs, but through bad feeding hens I have only reared four. Two of them are on the perches, and the other two doing well in nest. I have never possessed a Goldfinch in all my life until last November, and for him I gave the sum of 3s.

Cage Birds in the Army.

Sir,—Soldiers on home stations are not permitted to keep singing birds in barrack rooms. Birds "that are not classed as songsters" may be kept provided permission to this effect is obtained from the commanding officer, but the question as to what birds this clause can refer to is such a difficult one to solve that it is still a subject for speculation. On foreign stations this regulation is not always strictly observed and many barrack rooms boast birds in cages. This regulation does not refer to the married men. In the married quarters cage birds are plentiful. This state of affairs is responsible for the stock saying in the Army if a man is going to be married "He's bought the Canary." And as a fact it is generally one of the first presents the newly-married soldier makes to his bride. Nine out of every ten canteens have a bird or two in cages, though the conditions (the tobacco smoke in particular) are not really suitable for birds. On foreign stations Parrots are often seen in cages. No soldier in home quarters would dream of requesting leave to bring a Parrot into barracks! These regulations refer equally to officers or men. One of the supposedly hardest tasks of the batman who serves the sergeant-major and who is popularly credited with having an easy time, is to "clean out Missus Sergeant-Major's bird cage." This remark has led to fisticuffs before to-day.

ADVICE ON THE CONSTRUCTION OF CAGE RACKS.

Sir,—Your correspondent, "R.S." seeks advice on Bird Room Racks, and I enclose sketch which I hope will assist. Let him (or her) secure strips of wood 3/4 inch thick by 1 1/2 inches wide, and from 5 to 6 feet long. If the wall is of lath and plaster, find the joists, and screw strips to wall with 2 1/2 inch screws, countersinking the heads; if wall is stone or brick it will be necessary to plug the same before screwing. Having procured sets of "Girder Brackets" nine to ten inches long, let him screw the shorter side of the brackets to the uprights on the wall at such distances in height, as will suit the height of his cages. He will be able by this means to remove any single cage at will. This will enable him to get three tiers of cages on a 6ft. upright—the bottom of the upright resting on the top of the wainscot. Next let him screw two strips of batten on each of the brackets, the length of these according to requirement, and drive into these cross strips four flat headed nails for each cage, so that they stand 3/4 inch. out of the wood. Cover these nails with vaseline, and stand one cage on each four nails. No red mite will ever pass from cage to cage. One 3/4 inch floor-board will cut four strips of batten. "Girder Brackets" cost me 5d. per pair. They should never be more than three feet apart, nor more than three to four inches from the end of the strips, or the strips are liable to warp. Be sure and secure those brackets that are almost square inside, and avoid having the screws in the upright directly under the screws in the bracket, or you will find great difficulty in fixing brackets at proper heights or intervals. The cages will be two inches from the wall and three inches from each other.—C. B. JOLIFFE (Rev.).

DID BIRDS ORIGINATE FROM REPTILES?

An Appeal for "Missing Links."

Sir,—I must have hit Mr. J. Allen pretty sharp, as he indulges in cheap sneers instead of producing facts. If there is a sensible answer to my query, "What has become of the monkey's tails?" Why not give it, Mr. Allen, and settle the question by sound argument? The fact is evolutionists are asking us to believe things which have never been proved, and even some of the greatest scientists of the day honestly admit that many of the theories propounded by evolutionists are very doubtful. Supposing then, that birds did originate from reptiles, it is surely reasonable to suppose that that process of evolution is still in operation; if so, then it ought to be possible for someone to procure something in the intermediate state, viz., half reptiles, half birds, or in other words to procure the missing link, and until this missing link has been found either between "monkeys and men," or between "reptiles and birds," evolutionists must not be surprised if just a few use their common sense upon the question, and refuse to accept every theory advanced.

J. C. WILMOT.

[The anthropoid (or "man-like") apes do not possess tails. Mr. Wilmot can verify this at any museum, or at the London Zoo. And these apes are the nearest living "link" 'twixt monkey and man known to evolutionists.—EDITOR.]

Is this a Reversion to an Ancestral Characteristic?

Sir,—With reference to this correspondence, "Did Birds Originate from Reptiles?" it may interest your readers to learn that I have just bred a young Norwich Plainhead cock with three claws growing from the butt of its right wing. The claws, with three short feathers growing from their bases, stand out almost at right angles to the bird's body. They are quite hard, and similar to the claws on its feet, only smaller. The bird is at present four weeks old, and is a typical marked buff Norwich in every other respect.

I do not think that any scientist claims that birds are descended from reptiles, but I believe it is unanimously acknowledged now that birds and reptiles are descended from some common ancestor, at present unknown. A diagram of a modern bird's wing (see "Bird Life," by Pycraft), shows that a bird's wing is composed of its arm bones, and index finger, with the remains of two other fingers. I assume that my little bird has the rudiments of the two missing digits as well, with claws attached, and also a claw growing from the thumb. I will gladly show the little bird to anyone wishing to see it, if they apply to you, Mr. Editor, for my address (Bournemouth).

I should advise anyone interested in the descent and structure of birds, and who has not yet studied the subject, to invest 1s. in Mr. Pycraft's little book "Bird Life" (which is a summary of his larger work, "The History of Birds"), and acquaint himself with the opinions of scientists on the subject, and their reasons for forming these opinions, before ignorantly condemning them wholesale.

VIOLET BOXER.

A Defence of Evolution.

Sir,—In reply to Mr. McLean's letter I may say that I do indeed wish to "foist" upon the readers of CAGE BIRDS the idea that birds were descended from winged reptiles, winged reptiles from wingless ones, and men from animals, which, though not to be found in any Zoo, we should, if we could see them alive to-day, unhesitatingly describe as monkeys. I will even go further, and at the risk of Mr. McLean making an application to have me confined as a dangerous lunatic, state that I believe that man, monkeys, reptiles, and insects, are all descended from minute jelly-like creatures, such as the microscope reveals to us in a pool of stagnant water.

Mr. McLean being so firm a disbeliever in the theory of evolution, presumably considers the science of geology as so much "bunkum." If he did not, he would be aware that certain formations of rock are known to be older than others and to give a date to the animal and plant remains found in them. In the oldest of these rocks we get the remains of shellfish and strange creatures distantly related to modern lobsters and crabs, but no bones of reptiles, birds, or beasts. Later, we find the remains of fishes and reptiles, but not of warm-blooded animals, which, when they do appear, show by their bones that they were simple in structure and reptilian in character and generally of small size. With the appearance of mammals on the scene the task of the evolutionist becomes easier, and the development of, for instance, the modern horse from a curious little five-toed animal the size of a dog, is obvious to anyone who has had the chance of seeing the skeleton of the ancestral form side by side with that of the modern one, and all the various "missing links," of which a very complete chain has been discovered. Monkeys do not make their appearance until quite a late stage in the history of the world and, as one would expect, the bones of the earliest monkeys show them to have been "simple" forms, probably of low intelligence and very inferior to the higher (tail-less) apes.

But to return to the birds, Mr. McLean says that in my reference to the "archæopteryx" I have described a winged reptile. I have certainly described a creature uncommonly like one, but I omitted to mention that the fossilized mud in which the remains were found, contained the clearest imprint of that peculiarly avian-characteristic, feathers, as anyone who has visited the original specimen in a Continental museum, or seen the cast of it at South Kensington, may observe for himself! Mr. McLean says that there are some reptiles which do not reproduce by eggs, and some birds which have no scales on their legs. With all deference, I can positively state that there is not a single reptile in existence whose young are not hatched from eggs, though, as in the case of the viper, these may never actually leave the body of the parent. I must confess, too, that I cannot, for the moment, call to mind any bird whose legs and feet are entirely without trace of scales; but even if such are to be found, they are so exceedingly few in number that I cannot see that my argument is weakened.

The suggestion made in another letter that experiments should be conducted with the more bird-like reptiles does not take into consideration the fact that changes like that from reptile to bird do not take ten years, nor a hundred years, nor a thousand years, but a period of time so vast that the human brain is incapable of properly realising it. Very likely, too, the conditions of the world of to-day are unfavourable to such a change, for even winged reptiles—the first step in the evolution of the bird—have been extinct for untold ages.

In one point I do, however, agree with Mr. McLean. He says that evolution does not explain the origin of life. That it can never do, any more than it can tell us at what precise period in man's upward progress the Creator saw that man had attained to the degree of intelligence essential to the proper comprehension of His Being. For all that, there is, to my mind; nothing in the theory of evolution which conflicts with those portions of the Bible which are neither allegorical nor founded more or less entirely on human tradition.

K. WELLS.

Was the Doctor Wrong?

Sir,—Mankind has always resisted with marvellous and inexplicable fury any disturbance of settled belief. It was against this spirit that the pioneers of the evolution theory had to battle. "Man is an upright being; the monkey goes on all fours," says one of the writers last week. Was it ever thus? I was reminded very forcibly a short time ago of "our old family tree in Zanzibar." A friend had been operated on for appendicitis. The doctor was explaining how a certain organ had to be removed; it was, he said, a useless one. "You see," he exclaimed, "only if you get like this (on all fours) does the organ become one of utility." And though a religionist the doctor expressed his belief that in some remote period man went about on all fours. Was the doctor wrong?

I hold no brief for evolution, yet in my study of birds I see a case for evolution. All our authorities assert that the many varieties had a common ancestor. Where are all the variations which the Canary has passed through in its development into the forms now existing? We cannot produce the "missing links." Is this a denial of our many authorities' conclusions?

R. SOUTHWARD.

They Would, Without a Doubt!

Sir,—I was pleased to see at least one sensible letter on the above subject; I am referring to the one written by Mr. John Craig. As he puts it, we should deal with facts, and not theory. I would like to remind some of those professors that you are offering handsome prizes to those who produce any new variety of mule or hybrid, and no doubt same would be awarded to any person who produces a bird from a reptile, or shall I say a cross between a bird and a reptile! When someone does that then we can do no other than fall in with the views of those who would have us believe that such was the origin of birds.

Entries were very short all round, owing doubtless to the lateness of the show, but some very fine specimens were shown, indicating that Clapham fanciers will have to be reckoned with at coming open shows. Mr. J. Robson judged, and Mr. T. J. Hose again proved his great value to the association in his secretarial capacity, and it is a pity he was not better supported in entries, as only 60 birds were staged.

CARDIFF.

2nd young bird show, July 15, at Naish's. Entries again not so good as expected. Some of the champions are having sorry times, losing quite a number after the birds have been doing for themselves. What is the cause? Novices here are gaining ground, and some of the older hands must buck up if they want to retain their position. Once more, not a single Britisher was in evidence, while only one solitary young Mule (Allsopp) graced the benches, a very promising ionque Canary-bufffinch, which should be heard of again. Mr. Allsopp staged also a clinking el. yell. Nor., and won Mr. Bank's 10s. sp. for best in show. Mr. Charles' Yorks., which gained the honour last time, was just beaten on condition (moulting), but managed to secure sp. for best novice shown in champ. classes. Most pts. nov. Nor., Merry; nov. Yorks., Charles; most pts. Bord., Wiseman. Sec. Mr. Thomas, now quite an adept at his work, together with the stewards, had everything well in hand. DUBLIN (South Co.) C.B.A.

F.F. Show, July 25, Town Hall, Kingstown. Entries far exceeded the expectation of the committee, as there were over 80 birds staged. The Town Hall is an ideal place for a show, as it is so conveniently situated, and this, together with a large list of cash and other specials, brought out some good ones. Another great feature of the show was the juvenile section, and the committee thought it advisable to give three classes British to recruits and 24 entries were received. The committee gave six cash prizes in each of these sections, as an encouragement to bring them along to join the older ranks. It was amusing to see the happy faces when the winners first cards were placed on the cages, and we wish them every success. The Norwich section was very good, and some fine birds were staged. Yorks, as usual, were the special feature. Messrs. Began, Sholedice, McKeone, and Graham won the sps., and Mr. Began also won sp. for best bird with a very good buff hen. Foster and Waters won the sps. in Nor., and Foster also won sp. for best bird. There was a fine class of Mules. Foster and Ward won sps in this section. Mr. Smyth, the hard-working Sec., had everything in apple-pie order. Mr. Barelay judged Canaries, and Mr. Carrol, Brit., and their awards gave every satisfaction. Lynch won diploma for best bird in juvenile section.

EAST HAM C.B.S.

F.F. show, Town Hall, July 25. Yorks. were the outstanding feature in numbers and quality, but a Norwich shown by Mr. C. R. Evans took the prize for best bird in show. Borders took second place in numbers, and some very nice Greens were exhibited. The show was poorly attended, probably owing to Poplar being on the same date. Stewards were Messrs. Daw, Ferridge, Webb, and Potten.—F. Onslow, hon. sec.

DERBY C.B.S.

N.F. show, July 25, at Belper, the members going in brakes. On arriving, birds were quickly staged, and a fine show of young birds was judged by Messrs. J. Pegg and J. H. Drakely. Mr. Tapping won the draw for singing bird and cage, with ticket 947. Mr. G. Elkins, Belper, was in charge of the arrangements, and carried them out with complete satisfaction.

ALL JUDGES AND SHOWS SHOULD USE OUR

special expertly prepared Judging Books. They save much labour and time. We have just issued a revised and up-to-date

JUDGING BOOK.

The advantage this book has over others is that it has 3 columns for awards, and is therefore a great help, and a double check for judges, while there is always a slip free to be sent to the printers of the catalogue.

Questions and Answers.

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS

- (1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and conclude with either the correct name or a pseudonym.
- (2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query.
- (3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.
- (4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions or advertisements, or any other matter for publication.
- (5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated on the left-hand corner of the query.
- (6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest.
- (7)—If an answer by post is desired from our specialists, a postal order for sixpence must accompany any query relating to sickness of birds, or a shilling in ordinary enquiries, with a stamped and addressed envelope in either case. Dead birds must not be sent to the office (see Post mortems).
- (8)—All who desire letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence. All the fees received from this source will be handed over in full to the "Referee's" Poor Children's Fund (London).
- (9)—All queries must be addressed to the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Postcards are not admissible.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must, of course, be sent to the Editor.
 Canaries.—Claude St. John, British Birds, Mules, and Hybrids.—H. Norman, Foreign Birds.—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., Wild Bird Life.—H. Norman.
 NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc., of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Borders, Scotch, or any other variety of Canary, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his questions for answer to some leading specialist on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

CANARY WITH DIARRHOEA (A. M.).—You ought to have said how you are feeding the bird. See that all the foods and water supplied are quite sound and sweet, and that the vessels containing them are also kept scrupulously clean. If your dietary contains any material quantity of insect, this must be dropped out altogether for the time being. Give a staple of plain canary seed, and, in addition, give separately every second day a small teaspoonful of scalded summer rape, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, teazle, and broken groats. Stop giving green food at present, and give instead a morsel of banana every second or third day. In the drinking water add as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence for one day, and after this give six drops each of tincture of gentian, and tincture of catechu daily until the looseness is stopped. Keep cage floor as clean as possible while the looseness lasts.

A NOISY ROLLER (Whistler, Ashton-under-Lyne).—(1) Is the whistling which you liken to the noise of a cricket produced consciously by the bird as a kind of whistle, or is it more like a bronchial wheeze? If the former, I am afraid it is merely a deterioration of the song, which might have come about spontaneously, or as the result of the bird being kept within hearing of common singers, or of other birds, some of whose notes it has acquired. In this case there is practically no prospect of your being able to cure the bird of the habit. The best thing you could do would be to keep it in the company of one or two good singers from the time it ceases to sing for moulting until it resumes its song, then keep it in a closed song box near the singing birds for a time, and now and again open the box for an hour or two to give it a chance to sing a little and show whether it has improved any from the tuition during its moult, closing it again as soon as the fault appears in any way pronounced for a while longer, and then giving it another trial. In this way you may improve the bird, but it is by no means certain, as the bird is far too well established in the fault, I fear, to break it. If the trouble is likely to be of a bronchial nature you had better write again and say where you keep the bird and how you feed it. (2) The noise which the cock makes may not have had anything at all to do with the hen laying unfertile eggs. The causes of this are so many and varied that it is useless speculating about it without having the fullest particulars to go upon. (3) A good and well-trained hollow Roller would probably suit you, but I cannot name any strain as being the best quality singers and having good feather and symmetry. It is rather a question of training and the receptive powers of the pupil than one of strain. Individuals vary in every strain, and if you want the best in song you must be a little blind to such fancy points as feather and symmetry.

LIES ON PERCH (Enquirer, Bank Quay).—You are probably keeping the bird in unwholesome surroundings, and in its inactive state it is also probably a little over-fat, so that the lump appearing on its chest is not unlikely an accumulation of fat. Keep it in a bright and healthful place, free from cold draughts, but well ventilated with fresh pure air, and as equable as possible. Do not hang it near or over burning lights in the evenings, nor near the window. For the next fortnight give a diet of plain canary seed only, and once a week a morsel of bread and milk, and on two other days half a teaspoonful of summer rape. Give a liberal supply of green food daily. In the drinking water for the first week add as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence and ten drops of lemon juice every second day. In the next week give instead twenty drops of Chemical Food daily. In the next fortnight after this give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and on the alternate days add to the water twenty drops of whiskey, five each of oxymel of squills and ipecacuanha wine, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together.

WHITE COATING IN MOUTH (H. G.).—The young birds seem to have suffered from diphtheria, and the parents also must have had a milder form of the same complaint. It might have been imported with impure water or tainted sand or food. You could have done nothing at all with treating birds so young, but you should have promptly isolated them all, together with the cage they occupied, if you have other birds, as the disease is infectious. If the parents appear to be at all affected by the trouble now, get a chemist to mix you ten drops of pure carbolic acid and thirty drops of spirits of wine, in half an ounce of cinnamon water, and add fifteen drops of this mixture to the drinking water two days in every three for a week, and after this make the water slightly pink with a few drops of solution of permanganate of potash every second day for a week or two. Add a little lard and milk to the diet four times a week, and on each of the remaining days give a pinch of maw seed. Thoroughly clean and disinfect the cage before returning it to the vicinity of any other birds you may have.

SITTING IN NEST (Still Learning).—(1) There is no reason why the hen should not be quite a serviceable breeder next season, but one cannot go so far as to say she will or she will not with certainty. Only the actual trial will prove the matter. Your best course is to take away all nesting material and other inducements to continue nesting; turn the hen into a good-sized flight, where she can get plenty of vigorous exercise, and if she has a few companions to hustle her a little and thus prevent her moping, so much the better.

CANARY QUERISTS

should consult St. John's "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (7d.); House's "Canary Manual" (1/2); Battye's "Yorkshire Canaries" (1/3); House's "Norwich Canaries" (1/3); Weston's "Stock Book" (7d.); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); Dr. Creswell's "Hygiene of Bird-keeping" (1/1); Norman's "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); Ramsden's "Colour-feeding" (3/4); "Seeds and Foods for Cage Birds" (1/2); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each): No. 5 "The Pet Canary," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 10 "The Roller," No. 23 "The Border Fancy," No. 24 "Green Canaries." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Then feed on a rather plain but wholesome diet through the winter months, and get her into a good hard condition ready for the beginning of next season. (2) Although you seem to have had a very bad season, I do not think it would be correct to say that the season had been a bad one generally. There are others who have done excellently. As your own failures have coincided exactly with a change of food for rearing the young, perhaps you had better return to that with which you have succeeded so well in previous seasons, or at least try the method with only a portion of your stock until you find you can succeed with it as well as your old method. Personally, I have not a good opinion of a soft food containing a large proportion of oatmeal.

SWELLING ON CHEST (Anxious).—I am strongly inclined to think that the swelling which you say is like a piece of fat is in reality an accumulation of fat. Try giving a diet of plain canary seed only for a month, supplementing this only with half a teaspoonful of summer rape twice each week, and a liberal supply of green food daily. In the drinking water add as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence and ten drops of lemon juice every second day for a week. Then miss a week and repeat the doses again in the third week. If not better at the end of a month's treatment, write again, and repeat particulars.

BLINDNESS AND FATNESS (M. O. W.).—(1) Yes, unfortunately, there can be no doubt that the bird is becoming blind in the other eye. The greyness you describe is, I take it, the pupil of the eye showing a milky-white disc. It is undoubtedly a case of cataract, and nothing you can do will be of the least avail in saving the bird's sight. It will live healthily and happily enough in its own way, but on the whole it would do better in a cage by itself than in the aviary, as in the latter position it is apt to be somewhat at the mercy of any bullying inmate there may be among the occupants. Some blind birds, however, manage to take good care of number one, and are capable of acting the bullying role themselves at times. (2) The hen that is sleepy and puffy is most likely in an overfed condition. If she is in the aviary she is probably monopolising the good things in the bill of fare to a certain extent, and you cannot treat her properly in that position. Your best course is to cage her alone for a month or so in a good-sized cage in which she can get plenty of exercise, and treat her the same as advised to "Anxious" in this issue. You might do worse than add a teaspoonful of Epsom salts to half a pint of drinking water for all the birds in the aviary every second day for a week.

HAND-REARING YOUNG (Mrs. Basil Higgins).—Reduce the ordinary egg food to the consistency of thick cream with a little water, and give this by means of the "fill up" feed you have advised as much as the youngsters will gape for eagerly about every hour, beginning soon after sunrise and continuing until dusk in the evening. For about three hours during the morning, and again for a similar period in the afternoon, mix with the food in the feeder a little finely minced green salad. When about a fortnight old make the food a little firmer in consistency and add a fourth part of the bulk of soaked summer rape seed. Allow the latter to soak overnight, and crush it in the morning, at the same time removing as many of the husks as will come away conveniently before mixing it with the egg and bread or biscuit mixture, as the case may be. When rape is added to the food it causes it to become sour very quickly indeed, so you must mix only sufficient at one time to last for an hour or two, according to the prevailing conditions of weather. At this period you may also add a little hemp freed from the husk, as you suggest, if you have patience to perform this tedious task. But it is not essential to do so, and you may defer giving hemp until the youngsters can pick over the seed, which you have slightly cracked for them, and thus help themselves. With these additions to the food and being also rather more solid, it may clog the feeder and prevent it working. In this case, trim a tiny strip of wood to a spatula shape, and place the food in convenient morsels with this, well back in the throat as they gape.

YOUNG AND MOULTING (E. M. T.).—(1) You make no mention of green food in the dietary of the young, and if you are giving this, it is just possible that a slight reduction in the quantity given would be all that is required to stop the looseness. You might also try adding a dusting of powdered cuttlefish in the egg food in place of the bismuth. It is best to leave drugs and chemicals of all descriptions alone when they can be done without. I think if you make your egg food of equal parts bread crumb, arrowroot biscuit, crushed soaked rape, and egg yolk you will find the trouble with the young disappear without the use of any remedial agent of any other kind. If your present food differs very materially from this, begin with it gradually, giving only a few feeds with it the first day. Do not cram them too much. Give only as much at each feeding time as they will gape for eagerly. It is quite right to keep a light cover over them until they are nicely feathered. (2) The sudden and excessive shedding of feathers is certainly the rapid onset of the moult, and is not at all a bad sign. Feed the birds rather liberally, and see that they are well protected from cold draughts, and all will go well. (3) The young Gold Lizard is clearly a weakling, and would doubtless do you the greatest service by joining its fathers. Anyway, give a staple diet of plain canary seed, and, in addition, every second day a teaspoonful of scalded rape and a morsel of banana, and on the alternate days a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with three drops of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed with it, and sprinkled with maw seed, and also give on these days a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, broken groats, and chopped sunflower seeds. Give a half-ripe plantain stalk daily. Keep it caged alone, and treat thus for a month at least. In the drinking water add twenty drops of Chemical Food every second day for a month.

RESTLESS BIDDY (Cyclops).—The habit of flying on to the wires of the cage and pecking at the feet is merely a restless habit to help to work off the surplus energy which most healthy unmated birds are full of just now. Some birds will be continually pecking at the wire, or perches, or nibbling the paint off the sides or lack of cage; and many other little schemes may be noticed in which they endeavour to work off their energy. There is nothing whatever wrong with the birds, neither is it due to parasites, as you fear. The same remarks apply to the presence of curled feathers in the tails of the two birds. This is caused by the birds frequently drawing the feathers through the beak and nibbling at the ends. You may straighten them by soaking them in warm water for a minute or two and then drawing them gently through the finger tips. Add a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea to the water of these birds daily for a week. This will cool them and help to stop the restlessness.

LAYING FROM PERCH (A New Starter).—I am afraid you can do nothing at all more than you are already doing with a hen that refuses to lay in a nest and drops her eggs from the perch. That is, if her typical qualities make it worth while, to cover the cage floor with sawdust or oat-husk to prevent damage to the eggs, and having saved them so far, place them under other hens to be hatched and the young reared. If only a common hen of no particular quality, she is not worth troubling with, and I should discard her altogether as a breeding bird. You say nothing about her building traits. If it is that she has an abnormal twist and wants to nest in some particular place other than the one you select, you should humour her, even if it is to allow her to have the nest-box or pan on the cage floor. By doing so she may lay in the nest and incubate the eggs after the manner of any other self-respecting hen. But you cannot persuade her to lay in the nest if she prefers doing otherwise.

NON-SINGER BREEDING (Amethyst).—If the bird is in good sound health and active, there is really no reason why he should not breed successfully, even though he does not sing. Such cases are not infrequently met with, and they are the exceptions which go to prove the rule, as there is no getting away from the fact that the ideal condition for a breeding male is prime health and full song. These two essentials generally go together, as the average male in good health usually tries, at least, to make himself heard. In addition to the staple seed diet, give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with half the quantity of a mixture of equal parts maw, sesame, and gold of pleasure mixed in it every second day for a week or two, and on the alternate days give a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, and teazle. Give two crisp young leaves of dandelion daily. If really in good health this should have the effect of bringing him out in a week or two.

AVIARY ACCOMMODATION (E. E. Taylor).—(1) As I understand your sketch, the outdoor aviary contains only about twenty square feet of floor space, in which case you have far too many birds in it to have a fair chance of breeding. Four hens and two cock canaries would be ample, or you might have five hens and one cock Canary and one cock Goldfinch. Eight or nine nesting sites should be put up for this number of hens. The management is much the same as you will find in our handbooks for breeding indoors, except that you may be rather more liberal with such seeds as rape, hemp, etc., and broken goats or egg food. You would find full details of outdoor breeding in the first three numbers of "Our Canaries." (2) The C.P. aviary would answer very nicely to breed in with a pair of Rollers, provided it is not kept in a direct draught. Yes, it is advisable to separate the birds with the wire slide for a day or two to allow them to become acquainted with each other.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

FEEDING A CUCKOO (Majestic).—In my opinion the Cuckoo is a very unsatisfactory cage bird, and scarcely worth the trouble and expense of keeping. They are particularly messy in habit, get bedraggled and dirty looking, no matter how well one attends to them, and they are the most difficult birds I know of to keep in perfect plumage. For some unknown reason any new feathers get frayed and broken before they have fully developed. In addition to these troubles, they seldom live for any length of time in a cage. Hand-reared specimens are exceedingly difficult to get to feed themselves; some will rather starve than do so. As regards food, they are not difficult birds to cater for. They will swallow almost anything that is offered them. At the same time I would advise you to give your bird a better class food than you are using at the present time. Procure a pound or so of good insecticide mixture, and to this you could add the same quantity of thoroughly soaked "Melox" or puppy biscuit, mixing enough for the day's consumption, or, if you preferred it, you could give him the insecticide food alone, adding a little hard boiled egg, chopped lettuce, or watercress; a little shredded meat would be acceptable, such as beef, mutton, fowl, or rabbit flesh. He must have insect life—beetles, caterpillars, grubs, flies, mealworms, and well scoured gentles. Discontinue the use of snails; they are not at all suitable. Use an absorbent covering for the draw-board of the cage—sawdust or sifted peat moss, and clean out daily.

WHAT BIRD? (Puzzled).—Your bird is an Ortolan Bunting, a bird of little value, but one which is frequently sold as a Nightingale. The latter bird, as everyone knows, is the king of songsters, whereas the Bunting scarcely sings at all. (2) Both sexes are very much alike, the hen being a bit paler in colour, the throat and foreneck streaked with brown. By your description, I should feel inclined to think that your bird is a hen. (3) Canary seed is the staple food for them, and they will eat very little of any other, but you should offer a few oats, rape, cracked hemp, maw seed, and a little wild-seed mixture. Keep in a good large cage so that she can take exercise, or she will certainly get over fat.

LINNET WITH BROKEN LEG.—You appear to have managed to operate on your Linnet very successfully. By the time you read this in print, the fracture should be united, and you could therefore remove the bandage. This must be done very carefully or you may injure it again. If you ever have another case, you will find a strip of court plaster answer the purpose equally as well as the splints, and much more easily applied. It is put on damp, and when thoroughly dry acts as a splint and binding combined, and is easily removed with warm water. (2) You had better give the bird a little extra maw and hemp. This will assist him to put on flesh. Birds should not be in poor condition just as they are going into moult; they had better be a little bit the other way.

WHAT BIRD? (On the Borders).—I am sorry I am unable to identify your bird from your description. The Greenfinch is the only green bird I know of with a Finch beak. If it is not this, it is just possible it may be an escaped Greenfinch-Canary hybrid. If you do not know the cross, possibly you may be able to show it to some fancier friend who may assist you. Such birds are not particularly scarce, and should a fancier lose one of a batch, it would live for some time during the summer, as they are fairly hardy. An ordinary specimen would be a shade lighter in the beak than a Greenfinch, with wings and tail longer, and hardly so much yellow about the body, and on the wings. Its general appearance would be a shade more slim and somewhat smarter.

BLACKBIRD NOT SINGING (E. T. Sedly).—By your description I should think your bird is a cock, but is one of those nervous specimens that refuse to sing properly. This kind of bird is not at all uncommon, I have had Blackbirds, Thrushes, and Skylarks just the same, but as soon as they are given their liberty they sing at once. The only advice I can give you is to try change of position, changing him outside in the sunshine for an hour or so each day, preferably in the early morning or evening. You make no mention of your treatment, but you should feed him well, mixing a little hard boiled egg with some good insecticide food; offer fruit, and all the insects you can collect for him. If you have not been feeding him very liberally this change and the fresh position may cause him to break into song. A cock Blackbird is jet black with yellow beak and eye core; if he is a first-year bird, his wing feathers will be tinged with brown.

A THIRSTY BULLFINCH (C.E.).—You have nothing to be alarmed about in your bird drinking more than usual in the summer months, although I can quite understand it causing him to be somewhat loose in his motions. If you give him boiled water to drink it would probably check it, but I would advise you to put ten drops of dandelion juice in his drinking water every other day for a week, then follow this up with a small teaspoonful of chemical food, using boiled water or it will not mix. Your feeding appears to be fairly correct, although one part teazle added to your stock mixture would be an improvement.

GOLDFINCH PUFFED OUT (H. Davies).—You omitted to send your address with your query, will you kindly put it on a post card. The samples of seed sent are good and are not responsible for the illness of your bird. You make no mention of wild seeds and green food, are you using any? These are essential to the well doing of a captive bird as dry seeds. First of all give an aperient, as much Glauber salts as will cover a sixpence in two tablespoonfuls of water, repeat the dose in a couple of days' time, follow this up with a tiny pinch of citrate of iron and quinine crystals dissolved in the same quantity of water, do not overdose him, just watch the effect and see that he is not constipated. To your seed diet add a good feed of sunflower three times a week; if he has not had any before you had better crack them until he gets the taste. Collect all the wild seeds you can for him; just now there are plenty about, and more ripening daily, he should have a constant supply. try all you can to get him back into good health before he drops into moult. Have you our booklet on the Goldfinch? If not I would advise you to procure one.

FINCHES FOR NEXT SEASON (W. G. H. W.).—The catching season will soon be here, and this is the time to obtain your stock of Finches for next season's breeding. As regards the size of cage to keep them in I may say there is no proper size, the rule is to give them as much room as you can, but if you are going to make some stock cages yourself for single birds you will find that some made 16 inches long, 12 high, and 10 wide very useful, they would do well in these with an occasional fly in a large flight or aviary. As regards colour-feeding I think you would do better to add three of the biscuit to one egg, as it is not required quite so strong for colour-feeding as for rearing. To one teaspoonful of this mixture add two spoonfuls of colour-food, but do not make it this strength to start with, add a little at first and gradually increase it, or you may have some trouble to get them to eat it.

CONCERNING WILD BIRDS (E. M. T.).—Thanks for your interesting account of birds' nests. Your description of last one found hardly went far enough to enable me to say positively to what bird it belonged. If I may hazard a guess, I should say it was a Greenfinch. No doubt you will visit it again, when you should take particular notice of the position, shape, and materials the nest is built of, also the lining; the eggs, too, should come under observation, and full particulars of shape and marking, both distinct and faint, written down on the spot. The Siskin is a rare breeding bird with us, and does so mostly in Scotland, the nest being placed high up a fir tree, and consequently difficult to locate. If you think of hand-rearing any particular species, I shall be pleased to assist you. I do not know of any hook dealing exclusively with the matter, although there are frequent references and instructions given in the "British Bird Manual," obtainable from this office.

FEEDING GREENFINCH AND BULLFINCH (G. W.).—I gather from your letter that you have been feeding your birds on hard seed only, as you say nothing whatever of green food. By your description I fancy your Bullie is likely to develop asthma, if you are not careful. Give her an aperient at once. Dissolve as much Glauber Salts as will cover a sixpence in her drinking water, and give when cold. Let her have it one day, and then miss one, and give another dose. In addition to the seeds you are giving, soak some teazle and rape, and let her have a little daily. You should gather all the wild food you can, dandelion leaves and seed pods, seeding groundsel, chickweed, shepherd's purse, and others as they come in season. Be liberal with these, and let her bathe frequently. (2) They do not as a rule eat mealworms.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

WHAT PARROT? (C. E.).—Regret I must ask you to wait till next issue for a final reply.

MEYER'S PARROT (N. S. A.).—I rather doubt asthma being the trouble. Do not give any more of the sop. Give one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking-water till the bowels have been well moved, then use half a teaspoonful of Byno-phosphates in lieu of the magnesia. Bathe the nostrils with dilute glyco-thymone (1 in 10), using a mop camel-hair brush. Take a piece of stale bread, biscuit, or plain cake, whichever the bird fancies most; very lightly moisten with hot water, then allow to soak into it five drops of cod liver oil. Give this daily till the bird is in condition again. You can offer nuts, either shelled walnuts or shelled Barcelona nuts are best. I presume you are supply grit and cuttlebone; if not keep a piece of cuttlebone continually in the cage and sprinkle a pinch of grit over the sand in the cage tray whenever the sand is renewed. Keep the bird in your warmest room and in a warm position, yet where the air is good and there is no draught. It has probably taken a slight chill, owing to the variability of recent climatic conditions. If the above treatment does not show signs of giving relief, say, in seven days, repeat query with full details. Thanks for your remarks re Amazon. Please to note it has recovered.

BUDGERIGARS (H. E. A.).—It is an understood condition that Budgies in cages, or any other birds for that matter, lacking the vigorous exercise of aviary or wild birds, are apt to get gross and overfat (many birds are lost from this cause), unless a watch be kept upon them, and whenever they are found dull and inoppy should be examined, and if really plump the diet should be modulated and a laxative given twice weekly till their condition becomes more normal. A varied diet is all in the birds' favour, but when a bird is seen to be too fat then the most feeding items of the dietary (oats and rice) should be omitted for a time, or only given occasionally. Apple, and almost any kind of fruit they will take, is certainly good for Budgies, also all the Parrot tribe. As you are going away from home for a time leave a mixture of two parts Canary seed and one part of white millet well mixed together. Give also seeding and flowering grass as long as it lasts, but when early frosts begin to appear it should only be gathered about noon. Lettuce is quite safe, but for cage birds the thick, fleshy middle stem should be cut away. Give one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia every fourth day, but if the voidings become really loose, then only give it once a week. The mild laxative could well be continued for a couple of months. I presume you are supplying grit and cuttlebone; if not, keep the latter in the cage continually, and also procure some good make of grit (not sand) and put a little over sand tray whenever the sand is renewed. A more roomy cage is the best preventive of the trouble. You must not keep cages where the full power of the sun can shine on to the top of them.

BIRDS IN CONSERVATORY (V. D.).—(1) About twelve pairs would look very nice flying about, without much detriment to the plants. The rockery could also be at any rate partially cleaned periodically with a round brass brush about 1 to 1½ inches in diameter, such as are used in lavatories. (2) You must cover the whole of the glass with wire netting on the inside, this will also, to a large extent, prevent the wood of the sashes getting fouled. (3) I am afraid those which would do so are rather large for a mixed series. (4) No; but part of the roof should be shaded by an outside blind during extreme heat and thorough ventilation without draught provided for. (5) Greenfood can either be kept fresh by being put in bottles filled with water or wet sand. If water alone be used then the neck of the bottle, after the weeds are placed in it, must be packed with cotton wool to prevent the small birds getting in. Why not grow weeds, grass, lettuce, canary seed, etc., in pots and seed pans, and let the birds help themselves? (General.) You could keep such birds as Waxbills, Avadavats, White-eyes (Zosterops), Cordon Bleus, Firefinches, and if you could conveniently increase the temperature during the winter months to 40 or 50 degrees F., you could keep a pair of Yellow-winged Sugar Birds. You do not give me any idea of what kind of birds you fancy. Sugar Birds are quite easy to keep. I do not think you need fear red-mite in such quarters. The atmosphere should not be made too moist by too frequent syringing. Soiled foliage can be washed with a soft flat brush, the leaf lying on the flat of the hand, with the stem of leaf between the fingers, during the operation. If the plants or trees were done one or two at a time as they become a little unsightly the task is not very heavy. See that there are no perches over the plants. These must be fixed elsewhere and should be natural branches (twigs), and placed vertically; horizontal perches are not needed in such a place.

PULLS ITS FEATHERS (Orchard).—I expect you have wrongly fed it, and your not informing me how you have fed and treated it generally makes it impossible to give you a really helpful answer. I can only say—Confine its diet to seed mixture, dry crusts, biscuit, fruit and nuts, with grit, cuttlebone and water continuously; but, in making any change, you must not let it really want for food, as some birds will sulk at a suddenly changed dietary. So long as the voidings are not watery loose, put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, and on the intervening days put half a teaspoonful of syrup of phosphates in the drinking water. Give a little flour of sulphur daily, either dusted on to a piece of slightly moistened bread, biscuit, or plain cake, whichever the birds will most readily take. Spray once or twice weekly with a tepid quassa solution, choosing a warm, genial day for the purpose. Feather-eating is as much a vice as a disease, and almost incurable once a bird becomes confirmed in it, and you will have to persevere in the treatment. Follow out the above and report progress with full details in two or three months.

BUDGERIGARS (R. H. W.).—Pleased to hear of your success and regret to hear of your disaster, which may have arisen from two causes, viz., the bird flying against unprotected glass and causing internal hemorrhage, or a pure and simple internal rupture, but I think, the former was the cause of death. All glass must be covered with wire netting on the inside, and if you lacked sufficient air a portion of it could easily open or slide up and down like ordinary window sashes. "Do not let the cock mate up with one of his daughters, procure an adult hen from somewhere for him."

WHAT IS IT? (H. H.).—It is a Swainson's or Blue Mountain Lorikeet (Trichoglossus novae-hollandiae). The main dietary should be milk-sop and ripe fruit. Keep a small tin of canary seed in the cage so that it may take what it chooses. They are also fond of seeding and flowering grass, also lettuce, but the fleshy centre stem or rib should be cut away. They are hardy and vigorous and only need protection from draught.

CHINESE BUNTING (M. A.).—This is known best as the Red-backed Bunting, and has a typical Bunting song. The cock is deep rufous brown above and sulphur-yellow below, and is a very pleasing bird. It can be kept in a cage, either singly or in pairs. The Pintail Nonpariel (or better Pin-tailed Parrot-Finch) is very variable as to price, rather dear just now—say, 10s. 6d.—as very few have been in the market of late, and they are not easy birds to establish, many "shuffling off" very soon after arrival; but once established they are not fragile.

GREY PARROT (T. W. J.).—You are now reaping the fruits of the "hit-of-everything diet," and as it has been going on for so long a cure is really doubtful. Get our Nutshell, "Grey Parrot," 2d. post free from our manager, and bring your diet gradually into line with that given therein. Anoint the back of the neck twice a week with sulphur ointment (from any chemist), but do not use sufficient to run about the body. It may not do to stop the sop too suddenly, but gradually give less and less till you are able to cease giving it altogether, but while you are still giving it dust it regularly with flour of sulphur. Every fourth day, so long as the voidings are not watery-loose, put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water, and on the intervening days put in half a teaspoonful of syrup of phosphates in lieu of the magnesia. You should be able to give an amply varied diet when confining it to the following: Seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts, dry crusts, biscuit and plain cake. Grit, cuttlebone and water to be continually in the cage. There cannot be a rapid improvement in such a case. Report progress two or three months hence.

A FEATHER PULLER (P. J. C.).—I am afraid a bird that has been pulling its feathers for over two years is confirmed in the habit, and that it is next to impossible to break it of the vice. Aim at keeping it occupied by one means or another—give it a little exercise outside its cage (if tame enough) daily, according to convenience. In addition to the usual seed mixture, keep a tin of canary and white millet (equal parts) in the cage. Supply ripe fruit daily, any kind it will take. The other items of diet you name may all be continued. Keep the water in the cage continuously. Every fourth day, so long as the voidings are not watery loose, put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite, Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

T. Southam.—As your letter has nothing to say upon the matter under discussion, we have not put it into type. Mr. Coe is, of course, entitled to take whatever view seems to him the right one.

Brezton Taffy.—The date for both counties is August 1st.

J. Bell.—We have no hesitation in expressing the opinion that the birds were not the cause of the trouble. We will collect one or two other views and write you direct later on.

Goldchaff.—Thanks for your interesting letter. We shall be very pleased to receive the photo of your beautiful back-yard. Your query has been forwarded to our Mr. Norman, who will reply next week.

W. Alderman.—Both cock and hen Mules (Goldfinch, Linnet, Siskin, etc.) when in high condition will go through all the acts incidental to the production of young birds—including the building of a nest—in precisely the same way as Canaries. It is only in exceptionally rare instances, however, that they have been known to fertilise eggs, or lay fertile eggs.

Smell.—We have never tested the matter, but are of opinion that the smell of the cresote would be in no wise harmful to birds. We take it, of course, that the smell would not be overpoweringly strong.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers in all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

The authors, all well-known experts in their various subjects, have in each case endeavoured to give in an easily understandable manner, the methods to be employed in reaching success in that particular branch of the cage-bird hobby dealt with. This list comprises a set of books of unique value to bird-keepers. There is all the experience of years of careful study at the disposal of our readers. The books are based on the hard-earned knowledge of men who are recognised as the first authorities, and they are able to tell in a conclusive manner all the interesting "ins and outs" in their respective subjects.

AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS, AND CAGES, 2/3 (cloth gilt).—By H. Norman. Contains ten lovely full-page photographic plates. A practical guide which deals thoroughly with the proper Building, Fitting, and Management of Aviaries and Bird-rooms, and the making of Cages.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES, 1/1.—By H. W. Battye (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Absolutely the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES, 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Houlton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kinch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/-, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2.—By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATEELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/1 1/2.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc., Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts. Part 1: "Hardbills," and Part 2: "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—By G. E. Weston. Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

BIRDS OF THE COUNTRYSIDE, 5/4.—By Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. A handbook to the wild life of all our familiar British birds; their appearance and habits accurately described. With 12 beautiful coloured plates, and 118 photographic illustrations. A charming gift book.

PETS, AND HOW TO KEEP THEM, 5/4.—By Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. Gives the correct method of housing, feeding, and managing every kind of pet; all sorts of animals are dealt with—monkeys, dogs, cats, lizards, tortoises, also gold and other fancy fish, while there is a large section devoted to birds. Contains many coloured plates and photographs. Another charming gift book.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge; (Associate editor, J. E. Weston and C. A. House). Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to the Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

COLOUR FEEDING OF CANARIES AND OTHER BIRDS, 3d.—By J. W. Ramsden. Tells you how to mix the colour-food, and how to moult the birds to get the richest possible colour.

HARRY ALLEN, THE ORIGINAL LINNET KING THE FINEST ROLLERS IN ENGLAND at the money, everyone delighted with them. Notice I guarantee all my Rollers I send out cocks. They are bred by myself and there is no finer blood in England, and they are taught under my well-known champion Canary. All cocks guaranteed, 4/6; a few singing nice, 5/6; travelling cages 3d. extra; these Rollers won all before them last year. Try one. Linnets, to moult out sure winners for the bench, 2/- each; Linnets from the same place as the champion Linnet of the world, 1/- and 1/6; a few singing grand, 2/-; these are without doubt the largest and best singing Linnets in the world. I had the pleasure of being at Caswood on the 13th of July last, near Selby, where I caught the champion Linnet of the world. I was speaking to the farmer there and he cordially invited me to his house. I have sung many hundred songs in the village, and I am very well respected there. Caswood for the Linnet is like Germany for the roller, and they are the largest Linnets I can find, without a doubt, in England. Linnets taught by the world's champion, with new cage, and my book of secrets, 3/6; a few with quality notes, right for catching or contest singing, will sing anywhere, 4/6; they call them musical boxes, and they win all before them. Larks, singing nice and low, 1/- and 1/6; they are good birds. A few that will make champions, 2/-; beautiful Lark cages, fit for any room, 1/6; beautiful Linnet cages, 1/6 each, 16/- a dozen. Real yellow cock Greenfinches, like paint, sure winners for the bench, 1/6; young yellow cocks, will moult out winners, 1/- each; cock Brambles, 1/6; Redpolls, 1/6 pair; best Birdlime in England, 1/8 lb., 10d. half, 5d. quarter; if you can find better throw mine away and I will return your money. Best Linnet and Canary whistle in England, 6d. My book of secrets is the best book published of its kind; it tells you the proper rules of contest singing and how they sing at contests, and the proper time for each pair of birds to sing; how much you pay entrance fee, and how much the worthy host should add to it; how to make Linnets sing at one another with their wings down, and how to moult them and how to train them for contest singing; how to make Nightingales, Larks, Thrushes, and Blackbirds sing with full loud voice in five days; how to save the Siberian Goldfinch and the English Peppercorn Goldfinch from dying. It tells you the proper food for each bird; it has saved thousands of birds their lives. This book will be sent by return for 1/-. Thanking you all for your kind patronage: Harry Allen, The British Bird Champion, City Aviaries, 40, Beckett-st., Leeds (1707)

They are bred by myself and there is no finer blood in England, and they are taught under my well-known champion Canary. All cocks guaranteed, 4/6; a few singing nice, 5/6; travelling cages 3d. extra; these Rollers won all before them last year. Try one. Linnets, to moult out sure winners for the bench, 2/- each; Linnets from the same place as the champion Linnet of the world, 1/- and 1/6; a few singing grand, 2/-; these are without doubt the largest and best singing Linnets in the world. I had the pleasure of being at Caswood on the 13th of July last, near Selby, where I caught the champion Linnet of the world. I was speaking to the farmer there and he cordially invited me to his house. I have sung many hundred songs in the village, and I am very well respected there. Caswood for the Linnet is like Germany for the roller, and they are the largest Linnets I can find, without a doubt, in England. Linnets taught by the world's champion, with new cage, and my book of secrets, 3/6; a few with quality notes, right for catching or contest singing, will sing anywhere, 4/6; they call them musical boxes, and they win all before them. Larks, singing nice and low, 1/- and 1/6; they are good birds. A few that will make champions, 2/-; beautiful Lark cages, fit for any room, 1/6; beautiful Linnet cages, 1/6 each, 16/- a dozen. Real yellow cock Greenfinches, like paint, sure winners for the bench, 1/6; young yellow cocks, will moult out winners, 1/- each; cock Brambles, 1/6; Redpolls, 1/6 pair; best Birdlime in England, 1/8 lb., 10d. half, 5d. quarter; if you can find better throw mine away and I will return your money. Best Linnet and Canary whistle in England, 6d. My book of secrets is the best book published of its kind; it tells you the proper rules of contest singing and how they sing at contests, and the proper time for each pair of birds to sing; how much you pay entrance fee, and how much the worthy host should add to it; how to make Linnets sing at one another with their wings down, and how to moult them and how to train them for contest singing; how to make Nightingales, Larks, Thrushes, and Blackbirds sing with full loud voice in five days; how to save the Siberian Goldfinch and the English Peppercorn Goldfinch from dying. It tells you the proper food for each bird; it has saved thousands of birds their lives. This book will be sent by return for 1/-. Thanking you all for your kind patronage: Harry Allen, The British Bird Champion, City Aviaries, 40, Beckett-st., Leeds (1707)

Club Reports.

CODNOR PK. & EASTWOOD C.B.S. Meeting Aug. 1st. Three Ten, Eastwood, with a very poor attendance. Not much encouragement for the secretaries who are doing their best for the society.

POPLAR C.B.S. Meeting headquarters, All Hallows School Room, East India Dock Road, July 30. After the general business Mr. Cook gave a lecture on the Yorkshire Canary, afterwards inviting the members to ask questions and give him a stiff line generally, which they did, with the result that those present profited greatly.

BLAYDON-ON-TYNE C.B.S. Meeting with a fair turn-out of members, who passed a vote of sympathy with Mr. Jas. Maddison, who has recently lost his wife. Decided to have all the old classes in the schedule for annual show, and in addition an unlighted novice class, both in Yorks. and Norwich sections, also a novice class each for Crests and C.B., and two classes instead of one as before for cinnamon, namely, yellows and buffs, making a total of 91 classes—a good classification.—Geo. Haaver, Hon. Sec.

KIDWELLY P.P. AND C.B.S. Meeting headquarters, July 30, Councillor Cole presiding. Our balance in bank from last show is very good, £7 10s., and we hope our next show will go even better. Decided that membership be open to five miles radius from Kidwelly Town Hall; fee 2s. 6d. per member, and 1s. entrance. Intending members please send on before Sept. 5 as we intend increasing our classification for open show, Nov. 4. All welcome to our next meeting, Aug. 15, at 7.30, Bell Hotel, Kidwelly, where we are then going through the classification.—Chas. Price, hon. sec.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (East End) C.B.S. Meeting and table show July 29, Leighton's School, Heaton Road, Mr. Hutchinson chair. We had a very interesting application for membership from Mr. J. R. Cox, late of Wallsend, now of South Africa, who was elected unanimously. Norwich and Border classification was left over until next meeting, Sept. 29. Decided to hold another table show next meeting; special for best bird, also most points, young birds. Mr. Hutchinson judged table show. NOR.: 1, Matthewson; 2, 3, Gilmian; 4, Ender; vhc, Coutts; hc, Morrison; c, Ender, CRESTS: 1, Rushton; 2, Morrison; 3, Rushton, BORD.: 1, Rushton.—J. W. Coutts, sec.

GREEN CANARY ASSOCIATION. Meeting, Oldham Hall, Renshaw Street, July 30. Mr. J. W. Metcalfe chair. The business of the evening chiefly dealt with patronage; this was granted to Liverpool O.S., Oct. 23 and 24; Judges, Messrs. Mundell (Yorks.), Barnes (Nor.), Large (Bord.), Manchester, Oct. 30-31, Messrs. C. House, W. Booth, and J. Johnson. Bradford West (cocks and hens, Nov. 21, Mr. Cowgill. Bradford National, Dec. 4, Mr. Cowgill. Gateshead (Borders only), Dec. 18, J. Johnson. Palace, 1915, G.C.A., full classification; G.C.A. specials will be competed for at this show, providing Green classes are put on. The committee will be pleased to consider further patronage for suitable dates. The novice scheme was put forward, and the following patronage decided upon: L.O.S., judge, Mr. Mundell; L.B.N.A., judges, Helliwell and Brunsell; Walton, Nov. 14, Messrs. Ogden Bros. Next meeting will be a special meeting for novice arrangements. Mr. Handley was unanimously elected president of the society.

A vote of thanks to Mr. Tindle for judging brought a grand meeting to a close. The following were elected members: Messrs. Gregory, Fullerton, Jarrow; Hawkes, Gateshead. Subs. are due.—W. Curry, Sec.

PELTON FELL C.B.S.

N.F., Aug. 1, Colliery Inn; 60 birds were staged, and some good ones amongst them. All were nicely arranged, but there was not a good attendance. There was a great discussion on the any-variety class. Some thought all three prize-winners might have been "wrong-classed." There is a hard-working committee, with Mr. J. Stanger as chairman. Mr. J. Robinson makes a very good secretary indeed for a novice. Mr. J. Ribborough judged.

Margate cage bird show is fixed for Nov. 4 and 5. Mr. W. C. Poole, Stratford on Avon, judge.

We have read the quarterly statement of accounts of the City and Suburban A.C.B., from which it appears that the cash in bank and in hand amounts to the substantial sum of £30 2s. 11d.

We have changed the name of the Ber-mondsey and Rotherhithe F.A. to the South-East London F. and F.A., and the headquarters to 71, Albany Road, Old Kent Road, S.E., writes Mr. R. Jackson, sec.

The open show of the Wiveliscombe and Dist. F.A. will be held Nov. 26. Mr. J. R.
Houghton judge. The hon. secs., Messrs. Hill and Cook, Wiveliscombe, Som., will be pleased to communicate with anyone interested.

Allow me to congratulate your artist upon the lifelike drawing of our "wee gem" on the front page of CAGE BIRDS this week. This being only our first year of breeding high-class birds, the honour added to the success we have so far attained at the shows is very gratifying to both my wife and self. I wish CAGE BIRDS continued success.—E. C. Last, Purley.

OBITUARY.

I regret to inform you, writes Mr. W.
Curry, hon. sec. Gateshead C.B.S., of the loss sustained by the well known fancier and judge, Mr. James Maddison, in the death of his beloved wife, who passed away, July 17, after a short illness. Mrs. Maddison was highly thought of by fanciers paying Jimmie a visit, having always a kind word for everyone. The funeral took place on July 19, when a good number of fanciers were present. The sincere sympathy of fanciers will be extended to Mr. Maddison in this sad blow.

Mr. J. A. Muir, Glasgow.

It is with deep feelings of regret, writes Mr. Jas. Ward, that I have to announce the death of John A. Muir, on July 29, at 131, Main Street, Bridgeton, Glasgow. He contracted an internal trouble some few months ago, which gradually brought about his end.
He was buried in Rathglen Cemetery, Aug.
1. The funeral was attended by many of the Glasgow East End fanciers, and the members of the Freemasons Lodge (of which he was a prominent official) turned out in great numbers to pay their last token of respect. Mr.
Muir was for many years a keen admirer of the Scots Fancy Canary, and a member of the East End Society, taking an active part in the management. His attachment for his birds remained till the end. His presence will be much missed, and all fanciers will join in deep sympathy with his wife and daughter in their sad bereavement.

It came as an agreeable surprise to me to see such a beautiful illustration of my Bram-ble on the front page of last week's CAGE BIRDS. As your remarks imply, he has had a wonderful career on the show bench. He is now very busy fitting himself up with a new suit of the same pattern and quality as formerly, and his prospects are very rosy towards annexing a few more firsts during the coming show season to his already long list.—Arthur C. Brotherhood (Newport).

"British Birds" for August. Messrs.
Witherby, High Holborn, 1s. monthly, is largely occupied by a very interesting article by Miss Best on the Breeding Habits of Avocets, the article being illustrated by some beautiful photographs by the author. Mr.
Witherby details the method of ringing birds in Hungary; Mr. T. H. Nelson gives a graphic account of the remarkable destruction of sea birds caused by a cyclone accompanied by a terrific hailstorm, a photograph showing more than forty gulls lying dead in one spot.
The rest of the issue is taken up by notes from various observers.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all vermin to everything else.

Champion of the Birds

A lady attended at Highgate Police Court on July 2 and laid a dead Blackbird on the clerk's desk. She said she lived behind a nursery, and the nurseryman had an air-gun.
Whenever he was on the ground he had the gun, and as soon as he saw a bird he shot it.
The police were instructed to inquire, and the lady was thanked for her action.

Queen Alexandra's Doves.

It is interesting to recall that when, many years ago, Queen Alexandra visited Ireland, she received on landing a present of a white
Dove as an emblem of peace and goodwill.
On her return to London she bought it a mate, and provided a home at Sandringham, where the pair raised a numerous progeny.
The present inhabitants of the Queen's Dove-house are direct descendants of the original pair, being white, with eyes resembling pink coral.

Wild Birds in the Oldham District

The Ashton, Oldham, and District Wild Birds Protection Associations are appealing to the Lancashire County Council for an extension of the Wild Birds Act. Under the order now in force in the county, the Act applies from March 1 to August 31, inclusive, and in addition certain birds are protected throughout the whole year. The association asked that the protection should be extended to all wild birds and their eggs during the whole year in the district referred to. The Oldham Corporation has made an order for its own district, and it is said that the County Council will make a similar order for that portion of the district under its jurisdiction.

Nesting-boxes for Gardens and Parks.

Some years ago the Selborne Society, through the generosity of one of its members, was able to put up a number of nesting-boxes in Hyde Park and Kensington Gardens. The Office of Works as a result was able to report an increase in the number of Tits. The boxes used were those made from natural logs, and have been perfected in the Brent Valley Bird Sanctuary. The Selborne nesting-boxes are manufactured in England, and are more natural looking than those of Continental origin, while offering facilities for the examination of the nests and their removal at the end of the season. Information concerning them can be had at the offices of the Selborne Society at 42, Bloomsbury Square, London.

When Wild Birds Die.

The bodies of the dead birds are disposed of by flies, moths, and the sexton or burying beetles. These latter account for a great many dead bodies of small animals as well as of birds. Four of these beetles have been known to bury as many as fifty bodies in twelve days. All the insects mentioned lay their eggs in the bodies, and their larvae soon eat up the flesh. Carrion Crows also account for a number of the larger birds, on whose flesh they live. When birds are dying they always retreat into the undergrowth in out-of-the-way places, where they are hardly ever found. When in the dying state, they are always alone. Rarely, if ever, is a bird of their own kind near when they meet a natural end.—B. W. Strike in the "Express."

The Understanding Parrot.

The following anecdotes of a Parrot will tend to show that these birds do understand what they say—at any rate, the Parrot of which I write does. This bird, a small grey one, when asked if he would like to go to Jersey, replied promptly: "Yes, mum." His mistress objects to his using bad language, so when vexed he says "You—you—you —!" till she leaves the room, and then he relieves his feelings by saying heartily "You devil!" He will not have water kept in his cage, but when thirsty asks for a drink, which is given him in a little tin. He takes it carefully in his claw, drinks, and then throws the tin down. The other day he said: "Give me some bird-seed." There happened to be none in the house. Vainly his mistress offered him his favourite dainties;
he refused them all, demanding bird-seed, and would not be pacified till it was procured from the nearest shop for him.—G. Welburn, in "Country Life."

THE PATRONAGE OF SPECIALIST CLUBS.

Societies desiring the patronage of the following clubs should apply to the respective secs., stating date of show, number of classes and judges:
Northern Border and S.F.C.C., M. C. Potts, 52, Falmouth Road, Newcastle; Midland Counties
Y.C.C., W. Wells, Helmside, Erdington, Birmingham; Norwich P.H.C., F. Canille, 19, Lark Street, Burnley; Northern C.C., Geo. Dobson, 103, James Street, Blaydon-on-Tyne; Yorkshire and Lancashire British Bird and M.C., T. B. Inman, Thornbury, Bradford;
Northern Y.C.C., R. Tindale, 6, Gill Street, Bewell, Newcastle-on-Tyne; Green C.A., F. Handley, 29, Coventry Rd., Wavertree, Liverpool. Scottish P.H.
Club, E. Barron, 119, Montrose Street, Glasgow.
Crested C.C., J. Tyson, 109, Sloane Street, S.W.
Northern Lizard Club, G. C. Davidson, 6, Eden Vale, Sunderland. (Will secs. kindly let us know when their patronage list is full for the forthcoming season.—(Editor).)

Our Society: And Our Duty Towards It.

A paper (condensed somewhat by us) read by Mr. Thorpe before the Ardwick and Manchester District C.B.A.

THERE are several sides to all societies.

There are the mutual side, the financial side, the official side, and the social side. It is the latter that I want to base my remarks upon in as brief a way as possible, as I hope there will be a healthy discussion at the close.
From information (of course, I am only a young recruit) that I can gather, this society was formed in 1903 with a small membership.
Like all other societies, it has had a varied experience, and had it not been for the devoted and persistent perseverance of its officials and individual members, we should not be in the happy position of having such a sound and prosperous society as we have today.

Now, I gather from the heading (society or association) that we are a body of persons (this will, of course, include the ladies) united for the promotion and welfare of the small feathered tribe, and while it is most essential that we should have lectures, debates, washing competitions, exhibitions, etc., to reach, if possible, the ideal stage of perfection, there are other issues that are equally important if we are to be healthy and vigorous.

Laying a Sound Foundation.

Our aim should be to see that our society is upon a sound, unshakable foundation; this can only be accomplished by the hearty co-operation of every member. Our society must be self-supporting. We cannot work successfully without the necessary financial aid. Our flag must not be set at half-mast; we must never rest until it flies right at the very top. To attain this we must be a live society. Now, we can only become such by a continual climb. It may mean some self-sacrifice; but was there ever an ideal reached, or victory won, without it? Healthy competition is one of the finest schools that we can enter. Is there any honour in winning a prize without competition? And the keener the competition, the more valuable become the prizes.

Duty is one of the first steps to success, and if we, as members (here I include myself) did our duty and even stopped there, it would indeed be a great relief to our worthy secretary, upon whose shoulders a great responsibility rests. If we can lighten his burden (and we can), by so doing we shall indeed have accomplished something. If we have to go out of our way, remember we cannot do good without receiving good. Let us do all in our power that will in any way help the successful working of our society—not just within our own immediate circle, but outside. Whenever we come in contact with other fanciers, let us exchange our views and thoughts about the Fancy, which has become the object of our ambition. Let us speak about our own society, not merely as a society, but as the best and most up-to-date, making it a living reality. At the same time, do not allow ourselves to speak dis-paragingly or disrespectfully of other societies.

If we have nothing good to say about them, leave them alone.

While I am on this topic, I should like to refer to the correspondence that springs into daylight through the medium of the Fancy Press. We can by its means be a source of real help and benefit, if the spirit of our correspondence shall tend to the uplifting of our fellow fanciers. We may differ in our views and methods, and yet still treat each other with due respect.

Wherever there is a society formed, whatever it may be called, there is always an object in view, and it is not merely to breed birds, to hold fortnightly meetings, shows, etc., but for the blending together of experiences and experiments, of information that we have been able to gather, which will enable us to rise to the full extent of our ambition. Our object should be to cleanse our society from anything and everything that would in any way hinder our progress or mar our prospects. May our motives ever be high and lofty, never resting satisfied until our efforts are crowned with success.
You may say that it is impossible for us to reach the high-water mark that I have outlined. Do we think it is impossible to breed Palace winners? Not a bit of it. This has already been accomplished by some of our members, and what has been done can be repeated.

Reaching the Top of the Ladder.

How are we, then, to scale the ladder—to climb until we have reached the top? This can only be accomplished by binding ourselves together with a set purpose, sifting out any jealousy or ill-feeling, and uniting in one body with a determination that no stone shall be left unturned that will in any way help on our work.

Before closing, I would like to refer to what I consider one of the best, and most fruitful sources of a society's work, and that is a social in its real sense. Take, for instance, our last two socials. Not only do we get the best out of our own members by such united effort, but we gather from without that social element that helps to strengthen and knit us together as fanciers generally. By this means we make many friends by coming in contact with members of other societies, as well as those who are bird-lovers, although not belonging to any society.

I would urge every member to do his best to lift the social side of our work, so that we may enter into the exchanging of thoughts and ideas with freedom and brotherly feeling. Thus shall our banner fly higher and higher—an association worthy not only of the name that we bear—the Ardwick and Manchester District C.B.A.—but of the aim and object we have in view.

PRIZES FOR NEW VARIETIES

And the Breeding of British and Foreign Birds.

TO encourage all readers to try what they can do in the matter of evolving new varieties of the Canary, of producing new kinds of Mules and Hybrids, and breaking fresh ground in the breeding of British and Foreign birds in cages and aviaries, CAGE BIRDS is adopting the scheme outlined below, which we hope will commend itself to, and stimulate into action, every bird-keeper who can possibly join in it.

CAGE BIRDS suitable and valuable mementoes are offered to any breeder who succeeds in

- (1) Producing and rearing any new variety of Canary, bred in either cage or aviary.
- (2) Producing and rearing any new variety of Mule or Hybrid, bred in either cage or aviary.
- (3) Breeding and rearing in a cage any species of British or Foreign bird which has not previously been so bred.
- (4) Breeding and rearing in an aviary any species of British or Foreign bird which has not previously been so bred.

The mementoes we offer take two forms:
(1) A large suitably-inscribed silver medal in case.

(2) A hand-coloured certificate, suitable for framing.

The choice will rest with the successful breeder.

An additional prize of £1 1s. Cash will be given to the breeder of the Rarest British Scibiil in a Cage.

This is presented by Mrs. E. Warren Vernon.

Cash Prizes for the Best Written Accounts.

In addition we shall award to each sender of the best written essay in each of Sections 1, 2, and 4,

A Cash Prize of £1 1s.

that is, three guineas in all. In Section 3 the sender of the best written essay will receive

A Cash Prize of £2 2s.

presented by Mr. W. E. Teschemaker.

Rule 6, of course, applies also to the awarding of all essay prizes, to compete for which the essays must be of not less than 1,000 words in length. In fact the explicit-ness and helpfulness of the details given will be the chief features taken into consideration when making the awards.

The Governing Conditions.

(1) Claims for CAGE BIRDS Breeders' Prizes must be lodged with Editor within ten days of the young birds being hatched; and an independent witness skilled with birds shall certify to having seen the young in the nest or with the parents.

(2) All young, excepting only Canaries and Mules and Hybrids, must be entirely reared by their own parents, hand-rearing not being permissible.

(3) To qualify for CAGE BIRDS Breeders' Prizes the young of Hardbills and Softbills must live for at least three weeks after leaving the nest, young Quails six weeks, and the young Canaries or young Mules or Hybrids until after their first moult.
By "young" is meant one, or more.

(4) Our definition of a cage is: A cage to come within the scope of Section 3 must be one that can be easily moved, without being taken to pieces, from place to place by one person.

(5) Written accounts of the breeding, for publication in CAGE BIRDS, must be lodged with us within four weeks (28 days) from the date the young birds leave the nest.

(6) The decision of the Editor of CAGE BIRDS will be final and binding in every case and he shall have the right to call together a committee of expert bird-keepers if need be to assist him in coming to the said decision.

KEEPING AND BREEDING FOREIGN SEED-EATERS IN CAGES.

By WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., &c.

IN reaching the concluding portion of this series I can only hope that I have made all points clear, or, rather, sufficiently so to enable my readers to go forward on their own lines; and it now only remains for me to quote a few successes, and en passant to state that what I have written applies generally to all species of seed-eaters, whether indigenous or alien.

Bengalese (Uroloncha domestica).—In the days of yore, as a youth, the writer had no aviary, but kept numbers of British and foreign birds in cages, and one of the earliest species so kept was a pair of the quaint and interesting Bengalese. Canary, white millet, and green-food formed the sole menu, and, though they thrived exceedingly, no attempt at nesting was made the first year; only an ordinary Canary nest-box was supplied, and this they used only for roosting purposes, sleeping side by side on the edge of same.

The following year a box was hung up, open entirely at the front except for a narrow strip of wood, one inch deep, along the bottom. In this they constructed a domed nest of hay, lining it with a few of their own feathers. In due course four eggs were laid and steadily incubated, the birds frequently sitting side by side in the nest; only two of the eggs hatched out, one being infertile and the other containing a dead chick. All went well, and the young were fully reared, no soft food of any kind being supplied (now I should certainly supply a little soft food). A second brood was brought off the same year, of which only one reached maturity.

Humble but Acceptable Quarters.

The cage was a grocer's empty, about 24 in. by 15 in. by 12 in., with a wire-netting front and no draw-tray, merely a hinged strip for cleaning purposes. The nest was not examined till the young had emerged—during summer days the cage was always out of doors; during rain a piece of oil-cloth, with half a brick to keep it in place, kept out the rain. In similarly constructed cages, and with similar treatment, I reared Goldfinches, Greenfinches, and Bullfinches.

With Java Sparrows (Munia oryzivora) the details as to cage, etc., were the same as in the preceding account, except that a small Hartz travelling cage formed the nest receptacle. For over three years I tried to breed this species, but failed, till, losing my hen, a white hen was presented to me, which soon paired up with the Grey cock, and in due course brought off a brood, only one of which was a pied bird, the others being ordinary Greys, though perhaps a little lighter in hue. In these days I did not study cause and effect, and consequently it was left to others to deduce, and bring to public notice first, that a free breeding strain could be raised by such mating.

The young were no trouble at all to rear, the supplies being canary, white millet, crushed groats, and green food. River sand was used for the cage bottom, as I was able to get this from a small river running past the bottom of the garden. It was rather a pretty sight watching the family party—parents and three young—when the young emerged, caressing each other, or the old birds feeding the young and preening their plumage; all too soon was the juvenile appearance lost, for at a little less than three months old, they donned their adult garments and had to be removed to another cage.

A Domed Nest of Hay.

Only hay was supplied as nesting material; but they used portions of their green-food to line the bottom of the nest; it was domed, but so loosely woven that the incubating bird, and the young later, could be seen through it, and I was able to watch them whenever leisure permitted, both during incubation and when they were feeding their progeny. Silverbills, Bronze Mannikins, and other similar species have been bred in cages under similar conditions.

At a later stage I acquired a pair of Zebra Finches (Taeniopygia castanotis), and though this was many years ago, when they cost double their present price, I am able to recall the fascination with which I watched them, when I released them in a large box (packing case), which I had converted into a cage by simply covering the front with wire-netting and inserting two or three doors. I thought this cage a huge one in those days; it was 24 by 24 by 18 inches deep, and always stood out of doors, the top covered with oil-cloth, and a canvas curtain to cover up the front at night. I have never tired of this species, not even to this day, and have never been without them for long together.

In one corner, at the top of this cage, I hung a wire flower-pot basket, the kind with a flat back to hang on walls. A handful of hay was thrown in, which proved to be in short lengths, and did not fully meet the requirement of my new birdy acquaintances, and as I had no more hay at the time, I put in some straw, coarse wheat straw, full length with ears attached. Mr. Zebra hauled these up to the nest, getting one end into the nest, and then, with Mrs. Zebra's help, hauling it up, bending it this way and that, weaving it into form, till the hay base already formed was completely roofed in and a coarse domed structure was complete.

I can remember now how I marvelled at the strength of these little feathered pigmies as they laboured, and also at their ingenuity in adapting such incongruous material to their requirements. But they were not satisfied, and though a clutch was laid, and incubation began, Mr. Zebra was always foraging for material, so more hay was supplied, and with this he speedily filled up the interstices of his little abode, and when his task was completed his little castle was the stoutest and strongest I have ever seen a Zebra Finch construct, and I've seen a good many. Several broods were reared in this cage, and at the end of the season it was occupied by some fourteen individuals.

The Bill of Fare.

The menu upon which they reared their young and supported themselves consisted of canary, white millet, Indian millet, and green-food. A little dry, crumbled sponge cake was also supplied, and to this they seemed rather partial. The attraction of this charming species has never entirely lost its hold upon me, and I am seldom long without this cheeky, impudent, but pleasing species, and at the present time a pair occupies my mixed aviary. The species has been bred many times in a "Crystal Palace" type cage, and is quite one of the best for a beginner to commence with.

I am not intending to confine these notes to my own experiences, and shall now quote successful instances of other bird-keepers.

Dr. Hetley tells the story of his success with Crimson Finches (Neochmia phaton) in Bird Notes, Vol. VII., and from this account I am extracting as follows:—"They were purchased in April and put into a cage in the sitting-room, where they began trying to build a nest the next day. After filling two boxes with hay they took no further interest. Being moved into a larger cage

Mr. R. C. Tout's well-known Yellow Wagtail. It has won a number of prizes in keen competition, including first at the last Crystal Palace Show.

(5 by 2½ by 1½ ft.) in another room, the cock built a very compact flask-shaped nest of hay, imitation cowhair, and feathers. The hen laid two eggs, one on the floor and one in the nest. They sat on this single one for about a fortnight but it was not fertile, and after awhile they deserted it. Nothing daunted, the cock commenced re-lining the nest, and after some days we found them sitting again, this time very closely, and about a fortnight later we heard young ones 'cheeping.' In three weeks' time five young ones came down, and for two or three days the parents fed them very well, then the cock commenced chasing them furiously, so was removed, but the hen, though occasionally feeding them, also started attacking them in a very violent manner. The little ones being quite unable to feed themselves, we put them into a large cage, divided in two, with a wire space in the partition, with the bars just wide enough to admit of the parents feeding them through the wires. This they fortunately condescended to do, and the birds are now fine, healthy little creatures. All the family seem of a most quarrelsome disposition, chasing and fighting all day long, though they never seem to do each other any harm. . . . The young were fed principally on insectivorous food, mealworms, ants' eggs, white and spray millet, with lettuce and flowering grasses."

The above is a most interesting record, but I believe it still stands, after a period of six years, as the only case of Crimson Finches being reared in a cage. In the aviary it is also found that while the family party will agree together, as soon as the young males don adult plumage separation is imperative.

Dr. Hetley also succeeded in rearing a brood of Bichenov's Finches (Sticteptera bichenovi) in a large cage under similar conditions to those given to the preceding species, in his dining-room. Their first attempt resulted in one young bird leaving the nest, but it was not fully reared. At the second attempt complete success crowned their efforts, four young birds being reared to maturity. The young were reared principally on insectivorous mixture, seed and lettuce.

Under similar conditions success was all but achieved with Painted Finches (Emblema picta), but complete success has yet to come, and there does not appear much prospect of their appearing on the market again if one is to judge by the unfulfilled requests which have been sent in to likely sources.

Details Gone Astray.

Mr. H. Robbins succeeded in rearing a brood of Long-tailed Grassfinches (Poephila acuticauda) in a roomy cage in his room—no full details have been published, and unfortunately I have lost the correspondence; possibly, if he sees this note he will oblige with the details; but, relying upon memory, the young were reared upon insectivorous food, insects, seed and green-food. At any rate, success should be very probable with any of the Grassfinches under the conditions I have given.

Now I think my task is done, and I will merely remark in conclusion that with patience, accommodation somewhat on the lines laid down herein, and a spirit of keep-at-it-iveness, ultimate success could be looked for with most of the fringilline, and also many ploceine species.

The Master Singer of the Canary Tribe

By J. TOMLINSON.

How to keep the Roller Canary in health, to breed for pleasure and profit, and train for exhibition.

I HAVE had no personal experience of this deterioration, although I inbred when I have a definite object in doing so, but I have met with this lack of vitality in imported high-class Rollers, and my method has been to give them a moult and a winter's fly in the largest space available; and diet them generously, yet judiciously. In several cases where a cock has failed to fertilise the eggs from more than one hen at the commencement of the breeding season, I have transferred them to a large flight for a couple of months, then taken them back to the breeding cage for the last round, and the average results have been exceedingly satisfactory.

While I recognise the uselessness of this transferring to the flight in the event of a bird being sterile, the foregoing is sufficient to prove that beneficial effects will be obtained from the bird that through lack of stamina is unable to fertilise the eggs properly. I am also conversant that where such a bird is required for the show bench (as our shows are usually held from November to February) a winter's fly is out of the question, yet a moult in the flight could be easily arranged, to follow with another fly immediately it is no longer required for show purposes.

Reverting to the ordinary treatment of the birds now in the flights, if they are treated and dieted as I have recommended they should come through the moult in good order. In the event of any showing that the moult is putting an undue strain upon them, they should be isolated and allowed half-a-teaspoonful of egg food daily, with a little mixed seed, and condition seed given on alternate days. In a clean glass or earthenware drinker mix half-a-teaspoonful of Parrish's Chemical Food, fresh daily (small quantities of this can be obtained at a chemist's).

When the bird is showing signs of improvement, gradually reduce the diet again to the ordinary one, and place five drops of tincture of gentian in the drinking water, in lieu of the chemical food. On the bird resuming its normal condition it can be put back again in the flight. Medicines and tonics should not be put into metal drinking fountains.

Training the Young Cocks

There are many items that may come under this heading, some important, others of interest. There is so much to be told, that if I should wander from the beaten track I beg forbearance. When the young cocks are progressing with the moult, our thoughts will naturally turn to that important and necessary process, their education. A process, so to speak, of burnishing the raw material, a polish, or a tuition under a good singing schoolmaster. The good example given by the tutor assists the youngsters to sing the various song passages in an approximately desired length, also the ascending or descending the scale with a harmony and modulation that are only fully appreciated by a musical ear. The hollow roll strains often possessed this beautiful sequence of song tours; some, it is true, were more perfect than others.

Reader, in the course of your experience you will no doubt hear that the hollow roll strains were monotonous singers. Some were, and sang in a mechanical kind of way. Yet they possessed other sterling qualities: the fine rendering of that rich, round and deep-toned hollow roll, that deep, evenly delivered "hoo-hoo-hoo-hoo" of a well rendered schockel, a splendid hollow bell, and a fine bass tour; together with that desideratum in our Glucke singers, a well connected delivery, or to put the same meaning in other words—an unbroken sequence of the song tours.

By the way, what is becoming of that deep-toned hollow Glucke tour that we frequently used to hear? There are, I am fully aware, a few fanciers who have retained it; you will recollect when I described this tour that I said it was a forgettable one, especially where a bird that sings it cannot have assistance from others singing the same tour. I advise you to breed for it, to keep several birds together that are singing the tour, then you will be in the way of retaining this splendid and desirable tour. Don't be apathetical, open your eyes, and what do you see? That where the few have retained the tour, others have lost it. Others, in addition to their hollow Glucke, have introduced, in their desire for new tours, the bell Glucke, which is so liable to deteriorate in value.

Music in Words.

At the time of writing I have beside me a yearling cock that closely resembles the hollow roll type of singer. This bird is giving to a school of youngsters their preliminary education, this is a description of the song this yearling cock has just sang: Commencing on a mellow and moderately deep-toned hollow roll, in a few moments it gradually falls about a semitone, continuing in this key again for a few moments it gradually rises and completes the roll in the original key. This constitutes a good falling and rising hollow roll, as the length of time occupied is approximately the same before, on, and after the fall. Following with a good toned bell roll, which breaks into a bell tour, without a raising of the voice, it gradually falls into a deep-toned schockel that becomes slower and drawn out towards its close, to fall again into a deep-toned bass roll, with a slightly raised voice.

This is turned into a straight water roll, to turn and slowly ascend the scale barely an octave on the same roll. Turning again, the voice is brought down by easy stages into the straight water roll, to conclude with four flute notes. It is hardly necessary to say that the singer has completed his song in less time than it has taken to describe it, and in common with the best of songsters will sometimes omit a tour from a delivery, yet from the commencement to the close there has not been the slightest sign of a break in the delivery I have illustrated.

The Song to Please a Judge.

One of the desired objects in the Roller's song is to obtain a well connected delivery, and from a competition point of view the song I have described, well connected and composed of tours and rolls of a desired equable length, will please a judge better than a disconnected song. The reason for this is apparent. The number of entries at our exhibitions is sometimes huge, as many as ninety birds having been known to compete in one class. What a contrast to the classes at shows held for the other varieties of Canaries!

When we consider that the judge has to wait and value each bird's song the reader will understand why a bird with a well-connected delivery will find favour and be appreciated over one that sings two or three tours then breaks the sequence, probably to bring the same tours again, adding another, only to break again. This is the style of the majority of our present-day contest singers.

This inclination for more variety, i.e., the Glucke and water tours, has set an arduous task on our judges, and many birds that have a pleasing variety of tours often go cardless simply because they do not sing all they know when they are being judged. It would be unjust to blame the judge for this, for he cannot wait all day for the birds to sing.

I will give an illustration of waiting for a bird to sing all it knows. I was recently judging at a local show, and as length of time was of no consequence to myself, I gave the birds "plenty of latitude" to bring all their tours. After several attempts on the part of a few of the birds, I got all that I supposed they could sing. For others I had to wait longer, and in some cases I waited for two hours. At intervals during this period one bird treated me with only a prolonged bell tour, another refused to sing, while the third, although having a good variety of tours, would not touch on the hollow roll.

I do not wish it to be understood by this illustration that the judge is to assume that a bird should sing any given tour, yet this is one of those extenuating circumstances where we reason that a contest bird with a good variety of tours and rolls, similar to the one in question, should sing a hollow roll. Neither was my reasoning at fault, for the bird eventually touched on the roll, sufficient for me to have done my duty to all concerned.

"General Effect" and Its Value.

This subject, duty, has been the subject of many debates; some fanciers, upon reading a judge's award sheet—I do not refer to any particular individual—will point out that certain birds have obtained a good number of points for some of the tours, yet only a small number has been allowed for the general effect; this is considered to be wrong, and it is assumed that if the birds can sing tours worthy of such a good number of points, they should have more allowed for the G.E. Personally, I am not in favour of an elaborate number of points where not deserved, or, as it were "playing to the gallery"; experienced fanciers can form a good opinion of the value of their bird's song, and it is liable to mislead the novice, or one who exhibits his bird to learn the value of its different song tours.

In the matter of G.E., the points are allowed for the style, and the pleasing way the bird connects and delivers the whole of its song; and although some birds sing good tours, they may, and do, deliver the whole of their song in a manner that does not justify a large number of points being given for the G.E. As an illustration, I will say that should a bird sing five good, or fairly good tours, without pausing or breaking the succession of those tours, that bird is worthy of more points for G.E. than a bird would be that sang, say, six or seven such tours, yet broke the sequence of those tours. Or, to put it in another way, sang two tours, then stopped, to start again and sing two or three tours, to stop again, and finish the remainder of its song at the third attempt. Of course this is only an illustration, yet typical of many birds to be met with, and the latter description constitutes what I have previously described as a disconnected delivery.

This article is No. 46 of the new series of personal birdy experiences (continued from page 557), entitled "Through a Birdroom Window."

SOME years ago when I was in one of those bird shops in which at that time I spent much of my spare time, and all my spare money, I was offered some birds with which I was quite unfamiliar. The dealer told me they were Cape Sparrows. At first I was inclined to doubt his word, as I thought he had caught some common or garden Sparrows, and was trying to pull my leg; but on looking more closely—remember it is not very easy to see a bird's colour in a dark bird-shop—I noted that these birds had lovely white waistcoats, quite different from the grimy denizens of our streets.

There were five of them altogether, and as the price was not heavy I secured the lot, hoping I had cornered the market. Later, I discovered that a few more had come, so now the only thing remaining was to be the first in the field. They were about the wildest birds I had had for a long time, and dashed against the bars quite after the manner of our garden Sparrow when first caged.

I put them into a big box-cage, and thinking they would like a good tub, I placed for their use a small jam pot, thinking it would give them a better chance of a good "wash." It was very unfortunate that I did so as the event proved, for on coming back to look at them some hours later, I found that one of the birds had in some way lost his balance, and the consequence to him was that he had become what Mr. Mantalini called "a demned moist, unpleasant corpse," and I, sitting on his body, decided, as a mediæval jury once did, "That he had acted by the temptation of the Devil." This at any rate seemed to remove all responsibility from my shoulders. To prevent further "accidents" I carefully removed the cause of offence; for those unfortunate happenings have ere now brought many "to the demnation bow-wows."

So far I had not ventured to take a good look at my new purchases. These were, I could see, as handsome birds as any bird-lover could desire to set eyes on, even under the disadvantageous circumstances under which I first set eyes on them; but it is as unfair to judge a bird as he appears in a dealer's cage as it is to reckon up the attractions of a pretty woman when she is wrapped in a sheet and in the hands of a hairdresser.

When I came back to examine them, after the unpleasant little incident I have briefly referred to, I was decidedly pleased with my new acquisitions. They were, to use a vulgar expression, as handsome as paint. The cock is a bold and striking looking bird, rather bigger and shorter than our English Sparrow. He has a beautiful black mask and bib, a white ear patch, extending over the eye, and a long white waistcoat. His neck, shoulders, and back are a beautiful chestnut bay, his wing coverts delicately pencilled, as also is his tail; his legs dusky flesh colour, and his beak bluish. The hen is altogether smaller, her patches are brownish, her waistcoat buff, and all her colours duller. The sexes are as easy to tell as in the common House Sparrow.

The only thing that troubled me about the birds was their uncanny wildness. I put them into a big compartment of one of my outdoor aviaries, and they went banging about like shots from a catapult, frightening all the other birds into fits, and running an imminent risk of dislocating their own necks against the windows. That is the worst of introducing new birds into a new place, they always cause more or less of an upset. I felt that if I stayed watching them any longer I should break out into a cold perspiration, so I went off and left them to take their luck. When I came back in the afternoon they were not quite so rampagious, though a very slight movement on my part was enough to give them fits; still I was glad to see that the other inmates of the aviary were beginning to regard them merely in the light of "necessary evils."

It took some three days or so for these birds to settle down; during the first few days their innate timidity caused them agonies of fear before they would venture to the seed tray, and they had no time for other things. At the end of a week they somewhat recovered their equanimity, and began to take an interest in their surroundings. The cock Cape Sparrow and a vicious Saffronfinch developed long-threatened divergencies, and the hen Passer arcuatus came to her mate's rescue with beak and claws. As the result of this scrap I had to indulge in a little practical surgery, by sewing on the Saffronfinch's scalp as neatly as I could with a needle and cotton, and I flatter myself it was a very neat job.

Where these Sparrows were confined, the nesting arrangements, I flatter myself, were well nigh perfect. There were cosily-placed boxes cunningly concealed by furze, monster cocoa-nut shells, German travelling cages, and little logs—all things dear to the heart of a nesting bird. The Sparrows were not long in selecting a place for their future family, but of course it was the most awkward and inaccessible site that could be found in the whole place. A nest-box says too much or too little, and is as easy to cross-examine as it is to decipher Hittite inscriptions on Greek palimpsests by the light of nature. I could do nothing; all I knew was that the birds always disappeared at a certain point.

To get a ladder and examine the corner was an obvious suggestion; to do so, I knew, would be the work of a fool. The birds would desert incontinent, and as I thought of how I should have to contain my soul in patience I heaved a sigh as deep as the Atlantic Ocean.

I forgot to say that I only enlarged a single pair of the Sparrows, as long experience has taught me that birds in their little nests do not agree, pace Dr. Watts, especially two hens. I kept my other birds in reserve in case of accidents (which latter generally happen in aviaries, though we usually call them something else). Having prepared my readers for a catastrophe, I may as well tell them that I one morning found the cock with his head fast in a German mouse-trap, which I had thoughtlessly left uncovered on the floor; and it is pleasant to relate that, as in another case in mediæval times, where the body of a man struck by lightning was first found by his wife, the jury expressly exonerated her, saying she was not suspected of having done it; so it was here. It was clearly a case of accidental death!

Luckily, I had a second string to my bow, though I must say I didn't deserve my good fortune. I went and fetched him and let him loose; and that hen eyed him for all the world as though he had suddenly developed horns and a tail, when all the time he was only a very handsome specimen of her own kind. In a few days, like other lovers, they made up their differences, and settled down to married life, and a quiet complacency overspread my face like stealing sunbeams; but suddenly I pulled myself up. "A pretty building I'm making," I said to myself, "without either bricks or mortar. I'm up in the garret already, and I haven't as much as dug the foundation."

A Sign of "Business Meant."

But one morning I was charmed to see a long untidy straw sticking out of a box, and that I felt meant business. Nobody but a Sparrow would be so untidy. Are not our English Sparrows the same at nesting time? Clearly the lady had found consolation. She was like the widower who inscribed on his wife's tombstone "The light of my life has gone out," and excused himself to his successor by adding, "But I have struck another!" A few more days and the nest was evidently finished, and the hen remained most of her time within, only coming off at rare intervals to feed.

Then ensued a period of suspense; but one morning when I went to feed, I saw on the floor a little naked squab, kicking feebly and looking decidedly uncomfortable, beneath the box where the nest was. If I had not been a priest, I think it would have been helpful to say things; as it was I could only look them and think them.

The cock sat on a branch, opening and shutting his mouth—beak, I mean—like the whale preparing to swallow Jonah. I rushed away, got a short step-ladder, and after well warming the squirming morsel in my hand for a few minutes, mounted, and dropped it into the nest. I could not put it in, as the hole was too small, and I was too frightened of scaring the hen, and making her forsake the nest. It was an unfortunate accident, and yet it had its consolations; for it told me what I wanted to know so badly, that the eggs had hatched. Still it was quite on the cards that if the squab had fallen awkwardly the hen would fail to find him, and he would rapidly go bad, and she would forsake.

Having learnt that the young were hatched, I knew that the only thing was to keep them going by a liberal supply of live food. Accordingly I placed two dishes on the food tray, one containing fresh ants' eggs—the season was July—and the other a tasty but decidedly strong-smelling assortment of gentles. The bill of fare evidently suited the parents, for they spent the whole twenty-four hours in making rapid visits to the dishes in turn. These Cape Sparrows at the time of incubation are like so many other birds, purely insectivorous, and it is hopeless to expect them to rear young unless you supply their natural requirements.

Day by day the sounds within the box became louder and louder, exactly, in fact, like the cries of a lot of hungry young English Sparrows; and the old father was as proud as a cock on the wall. To see him descend to the food dish

The Abyssinian Ground Hornbill is a member of that curious family of birds distinguished by the extraordinary development of their bills. In the species depicted it appears almost as though a small beak had been superimposed upon a large one.

and gather up a beakful of maggots was a sight for the gods, and the look on his face was for all the world as though he said "Its all for your good," like ringing a pig! If he failed to come back at the right moment, his wife told him what she thought of him to-day, what she had always thought of him, and what his innocent babies would think of him in time to come.

One morning I noticed a strange little bird sitting on a branch near the nest, a little brown, undistinguished-looking thing, and I knew, with a quickening of the pulse, that I saw before me the young Passer arcuatus. In a day or two the rest emerged, and in a few days my interest in them waned, and my fickle fancy turned to newer and more exciting doings.

Then interest once more revived, for I noticed that the Sparrows were nesting a second time; but it was not long before I saw something was amiss. The birds would not enter the nest, for some reason. I got the steps to find out the cause, and to my disgust there was a great fat doe mouse with her litter inside. You all remember the story of the little girl who was found leaning against a sundial and watching the movements of a fly upon the dial face. "Ickle fly," she whispered, "who made 'oo?" "God," she whispered, giving question and answer. "Ickle fly, does 'oo love God? Ess? Ickle fly, would 'oo like to go to God? Ess? Den go." I'm afraid I said something like that to the old mouse and her offspring. At any rate they found themselves in a bucketful of water.

The great drawback in keeping softbilled birds is the nature of their food when they are rearing young. Gentles are high smelling, though I think their odour is decidedly healthy. It always reminds one of "Serubbs' Ammonia," which we are told is so good for putting in the bath. Some people are so particular. I once kept white mice. I simply adored them. The rest of the family alluded to my adored ones in no measured language and in the rudest way as "stinking little brutes." I went so far as to sprinkle them with eau de cologne. Even this did not satisfy. They could stand one odour, they told me, but two together was out of all reason.

I think there is only one safe way of keeping birds that rear their young on gentles; you must keep them out of doors—that is to say, if you value your domestic peace. In the house, as most of us married men know, it is ce qui femme vault! It isn't pleasant to be watched all day with the tragic front of a Cassandra. Thank goodness, I haven't got one; but some of my brothers are not so happy!

A Linnet Problem.

Sir,—This year some friends of mine have caged several nests of Linnets. They have been very numerous and nested in nearly all the allotments near the town. One nest was hatched in a sprouting broccoli, and four young ones were caged and the cage put in the broccoli. They were left with the old ones to feed for about six weeks, and plenty of mixed seeds from penny packets were put in the cage for the young to peck at, while during the time they were caged plenty of mixed seed was placed on a board for the old ones to feed from and give to the young. Two nests were served in a similar way. After the young were taken from the old ones and brought home, they were all kept together for a time, put out of doors in the day-time and at night placed in a barn to keep them from cats, etc. As soon as these birds were parted and given away and had been kept indoors for a few days, they all died, with the exception of one, which the man who originally caged them kept for himself; and this one was out of doors daily and in the barn at night. All were fed on the same seeds, and given the same green food, yet died in two or three days. These two lots were under my own and my neighbours' eyes. I wonder why they died on being brought into the house? I have not known such a thing happen before, and have kept them for years, and raised dozens in this way.

Judging Norwich Plainheads to the Standard.

Sir,—With reference to "Size, Type and Quality's" reply to my letter of July 25, I personally cannot see any reason for him being amused; perhaps he is blessed with a superabundance of humour. It is to me a subject too serious altogether for amusement. However, his letter only goes to prove my statement, that there is a great variety of opinion on what the standard ought to be. It is not like a political question to be twisted and turned to suit one's own perception—it is an ideal. It is there for all to see, as plain as the proverbial pikestaff. I am neither a novice nor a disappointed exhibitor; nor am I even a citizen of Manchester, where this show was held. I do know what a good bird ought to be, and whatever "Size, Type and Quality" may think about it the birds in question were undoubtedly long-sided birds, especially the yellow. However, I did not intend to enter on any discussion as to the merits or demerits of those birds. All I desired was to call the attention to the state of affairs existing to-day that ought certainly to be readjusted. I hope that selection committees when appointing judges for their back and shows will give the matter their most earnest consideration. They will thereby indirectly assist the good work of the Norwich Plainhead Club. Whilst I am on the subject I might suggest that the N.P.C. take the matter up, and let it be distinctly understood that their standard must be strictly adhered to, and not allow a matter like this to fizzle out as the result of petty bickerings.

Did Birds Originate from Reptiles?

Sir,—Are we not fast going into "Cranky-land" when we try to make believe that birds originated from reptiles? According to my reading, reptiles embrace the tortoises, lizards, serpents, crocodiles, etc., or in other words many animals which have a shell-like covering. Do supporters of this theory of evolution wish to convey to the uneducated that shells have transformed into feathers? What tommyrot! The reptiles as a class are mostly of aquatic habits. Birds in themselves are classified, according to the demands of the "Battle for Existence," as aquatic and terrestrial and not only are they so, but were—at the Creation—made so. I note Mr. R. Maxwell Savage in his letter refers to man not being intended for an upright being; his whole anatomy shows (he says) his upright bearing to be artificial—his digestive apparatus would work much better were he to adopt a quadrupedal attitude. Now I should like him to prove the latter. I know that people bend their heads when they wish to be relieved of an overloaded stomach! If the quadrupedal form is the original, then a man bent like a bow through overwork or rheumatism is an ideal being!

I note that Mr. Percy A. Thurley states that when someone produces a cross between a bird and a reptile, we can do no other than fall in with the views of those who would have us believe that such was the origin of birds. I will go one further, Mr. Thurley (though I agree with you so far) in that I would insist upon a production from that cross and another reptile before I would accept science as against Creation. My advice to bird fanciers is to keep on studying the best way of producing the ideal exhibition specimens and keeping them alive—perhaps with reptiles, eh?—Lizard? Canaries excepted.

J. KERSHAW.

[The question really is, whether birds and reptiles are descended from the same ancestral stock—one branch from this prehistoric common stock evolving into the birds as we know them to-day, and the other into the reptiles. Believers in evolution do not claim that birds originated from reptiles; they claim that a study of the fossilised remains of such extinct creatures as bear upon the point justify the assumption that birds and reptiles had in the remote past one common source of origin. The two branches have, of course, in the countless ages that have elapsed, diverged in very different directions, so that no obvious resemblance remains to connect them, either one with the other, or with this common ancestral stock. The idea that modern birds and reptiles could interbreed is too grotesque to merit even mention.—EDITOR, "C.B."]

Sir,—Mr. Wells might have saved himself a lot of time and writing if he had omitted to introduce so much matter that is irrelevant to the question under discussion. The question is not one on which speculation will count. It is a scientific question, and any attempt to solve it on theoretic evolution will assuredly fail. For over forty years evolution has been a particular study with me. Independent thought, observation and examination have eliminated much of the fine-spun theories connected with the problem and tempered the optimistic opinions I once held, like Mr. Wells. What I desire him to do is to prove by exact knowledge within the living experience of man that a bird was not always a bird; to inform us of that intelligence which was conscious of and witnessed the physical transition of the reptile into the bird, and to tell us by direct testimony that the physiology and anatomy of a bird were ever different from what is familiarly known to our modern experience. There is an eternal gulf between theory, speculation, assumption, etc., and fact established by science. Science being organised experience knows nothing of reptilian origin. It has never come within the scope of its experience, and until we have such knowledge and experience, science cannot accept the theory. Further, will Mr. Wells be bold enough to affirm on scientific authority that there are no reptiles which do not reproduce by eggs and no birds extant whose legs are free from scales?

The "Order of the Push" at Abertillery.

Sir,—If the writers of last week's letters are members it would be more in place if they were to bring their grievances before the society. Now Mr. Moule made a disturbance at our annual meeting because he was not put in office (these are his own words at this meeting, and I have other members to prove it). He was nominated for three offices, but was not elected. He has attended about four meetings since, and has made disturbances at three of them, ignoring the Chairman and telling different members that they are no good to the society. We picked a deputation to wait upon him, and he promised to be different, but has not fulfilled his promise. Several members wished me to call the committee together, with the result that they passed on a recommendation to the monthly meeting to expel him, which was carried. I notice he states there was a bit of jealousy about him being elected to judge our First Feather show, and that we thought to get a "bit of fun." I would like him to prove these statements. I was the one who nominated him for judge, and I will defy him to prove I nominated him for fun. As regards jealousy, personally I don't know who should have reason to be jealous of him. What occurred between himself and a certain member outside the meeting has nothing to do with the society. Mr. Moule stated before leaving the meeting that whichever way the ballot went he would shake hands freely with every member. Is this the way you do it, Mr. Moule, by running to the Press, making complaints? There are certain men it is impossible to do anything with in a society unless they hold the reins, and I am sorry to have to say, Mr. Moule, that in my opinion you are one of these.

Four Birds Out of Three Eggs.

Sir,—Being a constant reader of CAGE BIRDS, I should like to know if any reader has had the same fortune as myself. I set a Canary hen on three eggs on the 13th of July, and on the 26th she hatched out two birds, and yet she still had two eggs! I know for certain she had set her time out on three eggs, as two days before her time was up I had the nest pan out and had a look at the eggs. The other two eggs hatched out the next morning, so that I have been fortunate enough to get four birds out of three eggs, and all the birds are doing well.

W. H. JACKSON.

[A number of cases of two birds hatching out of one egg have from time to time been notified in our columns.—EDITOR.]

Never Say Die!

Sir,—I see in CAGE BIRDS a certain gentleman saying "Never say die" when you are a Canary breeder. I am very pleased he has such good faith, as I myself am of the same opinion. This is my first year of breeding Roller Canaries (well, Canaries of any kind). My father bought me a grand Roller cock for 15s. about two years ago, which has been a very fine songster. I had a Roller hen given me by a friend who does a little breeding for a hobby and for sale. Well, I paired them up and got four nice young birds. I paired them up a second time, and also got four young—each time out of four eggs. But the third time I paired them up I got five young birds out of four eggs, which, it being my first year of breeding, surprised me very much. Then I paired up again, and have now got another nest of four young. All these young have been bred by the same cock and hen, and all have been brought up by the hen alone. I take the cock bird away when the third egg is laid. I had another hen which I paired to the same cock, and got three young out of four eggs; one being dead in the shell. The latter hen has got four more eggs, which she is sitting on. So I thought I would like your readers to know of my first year's breeding as a novice. I should very much like to know if this is not a nice record for a novice with one cock bird and two hens in one season up to July 31? I have 20 young, and 4 eggs sitting at the present time. Starting a novice,

I give the credit for all my success to your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, and the good book by Claude St. John, called "Canary Breeding for Beginners." It is not only a pleasure to read them, but they are perfect guides to all (not only the novice) in all things concerning Canary breeding. I wish your paper all success, and hope to continue in the same way of good management by the help of CAGE BIRDS. I should like to mention that although breeding strongly with my cock bird he is still in full song and health.

FRED WM. CROWTHER.

Sir,—I have been reading the letter under "Never say die," and with your permission I would like to give you my experience of my first season's Canary breeding, thinking perhaps it might be of interest to others just starting and who are inclined to give up at the first piece of bad luck. I started with one cock and two hens. One hen went to nest and laid five eggs, and brought out five healthy chicks, but gave up feeding on the 6th day. She went to nest again and laid one egg; next day I found her dead, egg-bound. The other hen went to nest and laid three eggs and brought out and reared three very healthy birds, two cocks and one hen—the cocks are singing now. This hen went to nest again, and again laid three eggs and brought out two chicks (the other was dead in shell). She fed these birds very well for five days, when she suddenly took ill and died the next day. I had no other hen to give the chicks to, so they were lost. Thus out of three nests I have three birds. But I am as proud of those three as some, no doubt, would be of three dozen, and I intend, in spite of my bad luck, to try again next season. The Fancy teaches one patience. I wish CAGE BIRDS every success.

HOW LINNET SINGING CONTESTS & CLUBS ARE RUN.

Sir,—I will try and tell how we in Lancashire carry a club on. Some districts have a contest for time singing only; that is, the bird wins that sings the longest time in a period of time agreed on—say half a minute face to face, and five minutes of what we call "behind screen." Some have a minute face to face and eight minutes behind screen, just as the members agree to sing. The prizes are according to the number of entries. Others, such as Blackburn Linnet Club (which is the oldest and best club in Lancashire) hold contests for quality only, with three judges, one being picked for final judge out of the three. Leigh, near Wigan (another good club of its kind) has prizes for time singing, and also for quality singing. It would pay other societies to follow the example of Leigh.

Now all the club sings and open sings are sung on what we call "the wood;" that is, a kind of shelf put straight across the window, level with the sash. You get in your entries of birds, and the entries never close before the last three pair are left to go up; that means about a quarter of an hour before the contest will be over. Any man or woman (we have one, at least, here interested in Linnet singing) can enter as many birds as they wish, but can only win one prize with one bird (unless stated to the contrary beforehand). When you make a start, you put your shelf up to the window. You then want a slide to go between the cages; anything will do so long as the birds cannot see each other when put up. It must not be touching the cages, and both sides must be alike (not one side red and the other side white). Just a plain piece of wood is best, made to stand up by itself. You want a minute man; that is, a man to keep his eye on the watch to see when the half minute is up. He puts the slide between the birds when the half minute ends, whether the bird is singing or not; then he keeps his eye on the watch for the other four and a half minutes. The best way for him is to get five matches, or eight as the case might be, and drop a match every minute; otherwise he will lose count, no matter how clever he is. Then you want two timers (that is, in time singing) to count the seconds that each bird sings. You also want two tappers. So you have two men for each bird. One has to keep his eye on the watch, the other on the bird. Sings do not count if the bird sings under three, or five, seconds, as may be agreed to. The tapper keeps his eye on the bird, and when he sees the bird on his side singing he squeezes the timer's arm or leg, to let him count the seconds that the bird sings. No one is allowed to move in the room when singing is on. The timer books down on a slip the time his tapper has given him, such as 7, 9, 4, etc. No one must tell what any bird has done until the contest is over. Every bird, after it has sung, is given to a bird keeper. He takes your bird off you, and it is locked away out of hearing of the other birds that have to sing in the contest. It is in safe keeping, and it ensures that you cannot sing the same bird twice in one contest. Of course, all the cages are numbered, and you draw lots which bird shall sing first. We will say 30 birds are entered. I draw number 29; the next man draws 2. Our two birds sing together, and the first pair out of the hat sing first; second pair next, and so on. I like to leave the counting of the seconds to the secretary. He always invites anyone to count the sheets up, if he wishes, before he (the sec.) reads the winners out. Of course, every member understands that his bird must be covered up when he is in the contest room; that is, when his number is called as one of the next pair, he puts a cover over his bird's cage until the minute man gives him the word to put it in the window with the bird he has drawn against. When time is up the minute-man stamps his foot, and says "up." If there is anyone who does not understand this description, let him pay a visit to Blackburn or Leigh, and he will soon see; and if he tells the fanciers where he comes from he will not go hungry or dry! After the contest is over, and the winners are drawing their prizes (which are always given as soon as possible after the contests) you will hear the boys say "Don't forget the cap." The winners always give a little towards an entertainment fund. So when all is settled, and all have their birds back, we usually get up a little sing-song and let the birds see how men can sing. It is good sport for anyone interested in birds; of course, it would be slow to others, especially if it happens that a good few birds don't sing. I only wish we had contests oftener; and if Blackburn and other clubs would try time and quality they would get more members. I do not mean always, but at open contests such as Leigh have now and again. I hope to see all local fanciers in a Pendlebury contest shortly; but understand it is only a cottage window where we have the singing. Still, it is the same for one as for the other.

Preparing Linnets for Contest Singing.

Sir, In reply to "Linet" re preparing Linnets for contest singing, I have the "Nutshell" booklet on the Linnet, but I am only a novice, so if "Linet" could give me any special seed mixture, etc., for use for contest singing, I would put him on to a special singing cage. Any special information will be thankfully received.

The Annual Show of the Bristol Fanciers' Association.

Sir,—The Bristol Fanciers' show on Sept. 30th and Oct. 1st will not be held at the Bristol Exhibition, as originally arranged. A winding-up order was made against the Company on the 20th July, and at present the Exhibition is being carried on by the Receiver. The Receiver (Mr. Sedgwick) in an interview with our Chairman stated that he could not guarantee that the Exhibition will remain open up to that date. I had received many promises of support from others than our own members, prizes, cash and specials to a value of over £400 being offered, and shall therefore be glad if you will insert this announcement that we have arranged to hold the show on the same dates at the Bristol Coliseum, and that it is hoped with their permission to carry the show through with no other alteration than that of venue. Particulars will appear in your advertising column in due course.

A Goldfinch Fertilises Thirty-seven Eggs.

Sir,—Could any of your readers tell me the greatest number of Mules a Goldfinch has been known to be the father of in one season? My reason for asking is this: I have a "Pea-throat" Finch which I purchased last November as a house moulted bird. I had four hen Canaries which I bought, knowing how they were bred, with the idea of breeding light Mules. I decided to run the Finch with the four hens in single box cages, passing him on from one hen to the other as the hens went to nest. My idea in running him with the four hens was to weaken his breeding power so that he was only just in condition to fertilise the eggs, as my opinion is the Finch plays an important part in Light Mule breeding, and that light Mules are mostly bred from old Finches, or one only just able to fertilise the eggs. Up to the present he has fertilised 37 eggs. I have five to hatch now, and 28 have hatched, while four young died in the shell. Two of the young were quite clear, and 6 very light. I am now running the Finch with the last hen for this season. I should like to know if anyone has bred so many from one Goldfinch?

BEAUMARIS.

Eleventh annual show, August 3, in glorious weather. The birds made a grand display of good specimens in all varieties. Yorks. held their own well in number and quality, Norwich making headway in numbers, the veterans well to the fore and hard to beat. Several promising youngsters were also on view, well through the moult; others that will make a name for themselves later on. A good class of Finches and Mules came forward. Mr. Hughes made an efficient sec. Mr. W. H. Williams won special most entries and most points. Hyde's sp., Mrs. Jones. Mr. E. K. Roberts judged very satisfactorily.

Questions and Answers.

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS

- (1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and conclude with either the correct name or a pseudonym. (2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query. (3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper. (4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication. (5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated on the left-hand corner of the query. (6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest. (7)—If an answer by post is desired from our specialists, a postal order for sixpence must accompany any query relating to sickness of birds, or a shilling in ordinary enquiries, with a stamped and addressed envelope in either case. Dead birds must not be sent to the office (see Post-mortems). (8)—All who desire letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence. All the fees received from this source will be handed over in full to the "Referee's" Poor Children's Fund (London). (9)—All queries must be addressed to the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Postcards are not admissible.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must, of course, be sent to the Editor.

Canaries.—Claude St. John, British Birds, Mules, and Hybrids.—H. Norman, Foreign Birds.—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Wild Bird Life.—H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc., of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Borders, Scotch, or any other variety of Canary, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his questions for answer to some leading specialist on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

A REPORT (W. H.).—Many thanks for sending result of the treatment, which I am very glad to know has been successful so far, and trust recovery will soon be quite complete.

CAUSE OF PARALYSIS (S. A. M. James).—As the bird was palpably weak and delicate from the beginning it is more than likely that the condition you took for paralysis was nothing more than progressive weakness which took away the power of the bird to maintain its hold upon a perch. It is not unusual for these very delicate, anaemic specimens to lose the power of perching before the end arrives, but only a post-mortem could reveal the actual cause of the condition with any degree of certainty. This should always take place as quickly after death as possible, and would be useless in this particular case after this lapse of time even if you wished for it to be done.

AN ILL-KEPT CANARY (Harvester).—Insects may probably have been the cause of the bird's condition in the first place, but I do not think they are likely to be any trouble now, so, beyond giving a bath in which you have added a few drops of essence of quassia about twice a week for a few weeks, you need trouble no further about these pests. Treat the bird as follows and it will no doubt moult out into good plumage. Give a staple diet of plain canary seed. Every second day give separately half a teaspoonful of summer rape, which you may scald now and again for a little change, and on these days give also a little green salad of some kind. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of mixture of equal parts of hemp, niger, black rape, linseed, teazle, and broken groats. Three times a week for the next month give a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut dusted with flour of sulphur and then sprinkled with soft sugar, and each time add on the following day as much chlorate of potash as will cover a threopenny-piece to the drinking water. Slightly smear the bare places twice a week for a month with sulphur ointment, but do not daub the plumage unnecessarily. Allow the bird to bathe as often as it likes.

AFFECTED BY MOULTING (Hampstead).—It is not at all unusual for birds to be affected more than usual by the moult when they have left their youth behind them, and I do not think there is much the matter with your bird other than the natural effect of the moult. I think it will come all right if you take due precautions to protect it from direct cold draughts, and feed it rather liberally. Add to its diet a morsel of bread soaked in cold milk, drained, two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and sprinkled with soft sugar three or four times a week, and three times a week add 20 drops of Chemical Food to the drinking water. The scaly legs and feet are probably due to the bird's age, and the tenderness is undoubtedly due to the moult. Bathe them once a day for a few days in a solution of boracic acid—a teaspoonful of the acid in a saucerful of warm water—then dry, and anoint them gently with sulphur ointment. The difficulty of getting about the perches may be due to overgrown claws. If the bird is troubled in this way cut the claws back to a proper length with a sharp pair of nail or embroidery scissors after bathing them clean.

BREEDING QUERIES (J. S. de Freitas).—(1) Minor noises of any ordinary nature, such as "poking the fire," etc., whilst hens are sitting, will have no effect whatever in preventing the eggs hatching, but it is possible that sudden sharp noises, such as the violent slamming of a door anywhere near the cages may be responsible for chicks being dead in shells. It is best to avoid extraordinary disturbances of the latter nature at all times, but especially when eggs are getting near the time for hatching; but you need not fear any ordinary domestic noises doing harm. (2) I would not go so far as to say it is absolutely essential to give green food during the breeding season, because I have known fanciers breed successfully who never, or very rarely, supplied any green food. But I do say that it is most advisable to give it, and by doing so your chances of success, particularly with shy feeding hens, are very considerably increased. I do not consider either apple or banana is a quite efficient substitute for crisp young green salads when breeding, though banana may be given in addition if desired, or as a quite temporary substitute. Apple I should avoid at that season. (3) I have not myself used the food you name as a complete substitute for egg, so cannot speak from experience. I believe others have succeeded with it.

A CEREAL FOOD (A. A. S.).—Honestly, my opinion of the food of which you sent sample and prescription is that with a little less salt in it it might make a serviceable meal for rearing chickens or ducklings, but for young Canaries I should expect only the fittest and strongest to survive, in spite of, rather than in virtue of this food. The author in question was undoubtedly a man of experience, but nevertheless I doubt whether he ever reared many birds on this food. It contains too much salt, and far too much free oil from the linseed and hemp. The fact that only one of your birds seem to care for it should suffice to condemn it as a substitute for egg-food in your case. It is utterly useless expecting to succeed in rearing young with a food which the parent birds refuse to eat freely. If you want a substitute use the biscuit and desiccated egg which has been given in this column several times in the last month or so.

MORE SEED SAMPLES (E. B.).—The Canary is a trifle small, but is very clean, bright and sweet, and of excellent quality. Rape No. 1 is a good quality of English rape often sold as cole. When a good usable quality of summer rape cannot be got, it forms a tolerable substitute. Rape No. 2 is genuine summer rape, but is very dull, small, and besprinkled with foreign substances, as though it had been not too well stored. A staple of equal parts canary and summer rape, with a rather more frequent supply of soft food, and otherwise the same as other varieties, is the way to feed Rollers when breeding. You should look up the series of articles on the Roller which have been appearing in our columns during the past few months.

BAD PLUMAGE (W. H. C.).—Examine the bird's cage well for red mites, and if any are found, take the necessary steps to exterminate them. Allow frequent opportunities for bathing in fair weather. Do not worry about mating her until she is in quite good plumage again. Give a staple mixture of two parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition to this, give separately every second day a piece of bread the size of a hazel nut, soaked in cold milk, drained, lightly dusted with flour of sulphur, and finally sprinkled with soft sugar. On the alternate days give a pinch of a mixture of equal parts inga, millet, linseed, teazle, and broken groats. Also give a young growing stool of dandelion daily. Continue the above feeding for three or four weeks, and during the first week add ten drops of glycerine and ten of lemon juice to the water every second day. The rape of which you sent sample is winter rape. Get summer rape of a mild nutty flavour, and limit the use of the sort you send to seed mixtures for occasional use.

All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

CEASED SINGING (O. R. K.).—It is not very unusual for a cock which was in good vigorous song to cease singing when mated. Therefore, as both your birds appear to be quite fit in all other respects, I do not suppose there is anything at all wrong with them, so you can only let Nature follow the usual course. You certainly mated the birds too early, so you must not be surprised to have found the clutch of eggs of low fertility.

STILL TIPLING (Ayrshire).—You should see that your seeds and other foods, especially the hemp, are quite sound and good. Stop green food for the present, and do not relax your efforts to keep the cage floor and perches as clean as possible. Every second day give a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, teazle, maw, and crushed plain biscuit (dry), and on the alternate days give a morsel of bread and milk dusted with carbonate of bismuth. In the drinking water add six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of opium daily until the looseness stops. Continue this treatment for a week or fortnight, as may seem necessary.

TWO YORKSHIRES (Cannibal).—(1) You must first remove all the exciting causes of bronchial trouble, such as cold draughts, dusty or impure air, sudden fluctuations of heat and cold, etc. Keep bird in a moderate temperature, fairly equable, and do not hang it high up near the ceiling nor near or over a burning light in the evenings. Give a morsel of bread and milk with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it, and sprinkled with maw seed every second day for a fortnight, and on the alternate days give a little green food in variety. Add a pinch of Epsom salts to the water for one day, and afterwards five drops each of syrup of squills, ipecac. wine, and tincture of lobelia every second day for a fortnight or three weeks, as may seem necessary. (2) There must have been something very wrong with the youngster, for the hen to kill and half eat it at sixteen days old. At this age the young should have been getting very nicely fledged, and getting nearly ready to leave the nest, and altogether a tough morsel for its mother to half eat. If she had been neglecting it previously, so that it was not properly grown, try the method of feeding advised to "Laurence Connell" in this issue, with the next brood, and if the cock was taken away this time, try leaving him in the next time. If she then begins to ill-treat the young, at once transfer them to a foster mother, if one is available. Seeking the morsel of lean beef on the end of a perch for the hen to peck at has been advised for this vice, but I have no personal experience of its efficacy, and immediate transference is the best remedy.

MAKING FOREIGN BIRDS PAY (Mow-gin).—Weavers are the most precarious of breeders even under good conditions, though several species reared young in aviaries last year. The two which have come into colour are cocks, and if the other two do not come into colour they are hens, and whatever their species the cocks may pair up with them.

FEATHERED FRIENDS OF FANCIERS AT THE FRONT.

The Belgian Canary (on the left) and the Parisian Frill Canary (three poses).

The Belgian Canary is, as its name implies, prime favourite with the fanciers amongst our allies in gallant little Belgium. It is bred chiefly for its curious pose, well depicted in our drawing. Many Canary lovers in Great Britain also keep and exhibit this variety. Our fancier friends in France are keen lovers of the Parisian Frill Canary, the disposition of the plumage into queer frills and curls being accounted its chief beauty. Our illustrations of side, back and full-front poses are taken from our continental contemporary "Chasse et Pêche." The perfection of the "frills," we may add, not infrequently owes something to the artful aid of the owner of the bird.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers in all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

RULES.

- 1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.
- 2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.
- 3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.
- 4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

Absolutely everything required by catchers in stock, and all guaranteed brand new goods; send stamp for full printed list, which also gives hints on net making. Practically every professional catcher in the Kingdom uses my articles, and I guarantee every purchaser fullest satisfaction or return his money in full. During the term of the war many people will probably have spare time; to what better use can they put it than to have some real good sport in bird catching, and at same time augment their income by disposing of their surplus catches, but to insure this they must have serviceable articles made by a man who thoroughly understands what is required for successful catching. Every article sent out by me is guaranteed to have been properly tested and exactly same quality as supplied to my own catchers. (1740)

WHAT THEY SAY IN FAR-OFF AUSTRALIA

About "CAGE-BIRDS ANNUAL."

5, Errard Street North, Ballarat, Victoria, Australia. May 28th, 1914.

I enclose Money Order. Please forward the "Annual" to me. I always enjoy reading it.

W. MORRISON, M.A., M.D.

PURCHASE A COPY of the 1914 edition of "Cage Birds Annual" NOW you will never regret it, for you cannot spend sixpence to greater profit. No matter what variety of birds you keep, whether you are a novice or old hand, whatever the season, you will find information in "Cage Birds Annual" of the greatest interest and use to you. Now the birds are beginning to moult, you will find information in this big bird-breeder's budget, given by experts from practical experience, most helpful during this trying time. Below is given a list of some of the articles. Just glance down them, and you will be sure to find something of the greatest interest to you. For full list of contents see page 543 of the July 4 issue of "Cage Birds."

MISTAKES BIRDBREEDERS MUST AVOID.

A most seasonable article. Alone worth the small amount asked for the whole book. Mr. St. John's thoroughness in answering queries on the subject of Canary breeding is well known to the majority of our readers. This article, written in the author's best vein, gives in detail mistakes in bird breeding which must be avoided by all who would make the greatest success of their hobby. Besides this highly instructive article, it also contains the following:—

- STARTING A COLLECTION OF CHEAP BEAUTIFUL FOREIGN BIRDS. By F. Meakin.
HYBRID BREEDING IN OUTDOOR CAGES. By G. R. Pippet.
A HANDY GUIDE TO BIRD MEDICINES, AND THEIR USES.
THE SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF BRITISH BIRDS.—By F. Terry.
DIRECTORY OF THE JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS.

£1,000 ACCIDENT INSURANCE COUPON. In addition to this wonderful budget of bird literature, this marvellous little handbook also contains numerous sketches and art plates, and also

A LOVELY COLOURED PLATE of the two best birds of the year, by the well-known bird artist, Mr. H. Norman,

YOU MUST HAVE IT. SMALL PRICE—BIG VALUE.

Price 6d. from your newsagent or local Nutshell Agent, or 7d. post free, direct from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

SOFTBILL keepers, take expert advice before proceeding to buy and keep the larger species of insectivorous birds. You will then have no trouble in keeping your pets in the best of health. This advice is offered in "Nutshell No. 26," by H. J. Fulljames. It is a wonderful little work, dealing with most varieties in a highly interesting and instructive manner. Foods and their preparation, and the various styles of cages also receive full attention. Can you breed Mealworms? This booklet tells you how. Post free, 2d., from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Look at our list of agents; call on the nearest and get it for 2d.

HAVE YOU NOTICED

that I have not previously advertised British Birds this season? My reason for this is that, although I have had a large stock for some considerable time, I would not place them upon the market until all birds were thoroughly on hard seed. I now offer a splendid lot of genuine Worcestershire cock Goldfinches, all in pink of health and condition, at 1/6 each, three 4/-, six 7/-; specially selected larger cocks, for moulting for show, and warranted in free song, 2/- each, three 5/-; two-year-old cock Goldfinch, 2/6; hen Goldfinches, 1/- each, three 2/6, six 4/-; splendid lot cock brown Linnets, in superb condition, 8d. each, three 1/6, six 2/6, twelve 4/-; special picked cocks, for show, mulling or contest singing, and now in song, 1/- each, three 2/6, six 4/-; handsome lot of young cock Skylarks, 1/- each, three 2/-; cock Greenfinches, 6d. each, three 1/-, six 1/6; travelling cages, 3d. per 3 birds extra. Kindly note all birds are warranted properly netted in county of Worcester, by catchers employed solely by myself, are guaranteed feeding freely, and well on usual seed mixture, before sent out, and are sent on approval on distinct understanding that unless every satisfaction is given, birds have only to be returned and the whole of your money is promptly returned. For past 23 years I have been a continuous advertiser, and have never done business on any other terms than these.

REPEATING ADVERTISEMENTS.

Owing to the number of announcements received we cannot guarantee to repeat advertisements unless the previous issue, Page, and Column are stated by the advertiser. ADVT. MANAGER, "CAGE BIRDS."

Some Secrets of the Hybrid Breeder

The breeding of Hybrids is a fascinating study, full of failures, yet brightened by remarkable successes—successes in many cases perhaps unexpected—bringing pride, joy and fame to the breeder. No other side of the cage bird hobby offers so much in return to the person who elects to take a little trouble with it, or holds out to the novice so many opportunities for springing into fame. The magnificent work, entitled written by Mr. Charles Houlton, a man who has a long list of successes to his name, and edited by the well-known fanciers, Messrs. G. E. Weston and C. A. House, should be in the hands of everybody interested in the hobby. In this wonderful book Mr. Charles Houlton has laid bare the secrets of Hybrid breeding, and in a marvellously interesting and astonishingly clear manner has given information of the utmost value to the would-be Hybrid breeder. The whole work is written in easily understandable language, and its illustrations form one of the most remarkable collections on the art of Hybridising that has ever been seen.

No less than 16 unique plates in colours, 16 art plates, and over 60 sketches, combine to make this volume the most remarkable of its kind. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

This magnificent volume may be had for 1/-, carriage paid, and 3 monthly payments of 3/-, or for one payment of 7/6.

Instructive Books for Bird Lovers.

The authors, all well-known experts in their various subjects, have in each case endeavoured to give in an easily understandable manner, the methods to be employed in reaching success in that particular branch of the cage-bird hobby dealt with. This list comprises a set of books of unique value to bird-keepers. There is all the experience of years of careful study at the disposal of our readers. The books are based on the hard-earned knowledge of men who are recognised as the first authorities, and they are able to tell in a conclusive manner all the interesting "ins and outs" in their respective subjects.

AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS, AND CAGES, 2/3 (cloth gilt).—By H. Norman. Contains ten lovely full-page photographic plates. A practical guide which deals thoroughly with the proper Building, Fitting, and Management of Aviaries and Bird-rooms, and the making of Cages.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES, 1/1.—By H. W. Battye (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Absolutely the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES, 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Boulton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kitch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is bristful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/-, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2.—By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Koller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/1.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc.—Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts. Part 1: "Hardbills," and Part 2: "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—By G. L. Weston. Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

BIRDS OF THE COUNTRYSIDE, 5/4.—By Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. A handbook to the wild life of all our familiar British birds; their appearance and habits accurately described. With 19 beautiful coloured plates, and 118 photographic illustrations. A charming gift book.

PETS, AND HOW TO KEEP THEM, 5/4.—By Frank Finn, B.A., F.Z.S. Gives the correct method of housing, feeding, and managing every kind of pet; all sorts of animals are dealt with—monkeys, dogs, cats, lizards, tortoises, also gold and other fancy fish, while there is a large section devoted to birds. Contains many coloured plates and photographs. Another charming gift book.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge; associate editor, J. E. Weston and C. A. House. Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

COLOUR FEEDING OF CANARIES AND OTHER BIRDS, 3d.—By J. W. Ramsden. Tells you how to mix the colour-food, and how to mould the birds to get the richest possible colour.

"CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL"

A wonderful sixpennyworth of birdy literature. See announcement on Page 63.

FANCIERS' PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic menus, with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 5/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

"CAGE BIRDS" AND THE WAR.

AN APPEAL TO CAGE BIRD FANCIERS.

THE present time is one of grave national danger, but it must be accepted by all of us in the spirit of resignation and confidence. There is not the slightest reason for panic, and all dislocation of ordinary business routine is only assisting the enemy and injuring ourselves. We make an urgent appeal to all our readers to continue their hobby as usual, to defeat as far as lies in their power any proposals for the abandoning of shows, and to accommodate themselves to the situation with the utmost calm. The price of bird seed, etc., should be sufficiently regulated by the fact that all exports of bird seed are forbidden, and that the Mediterranean route is now open for our vessels. The need for cheerfulness in the home was never more pressing, and it is the worst possible economy for folks to abandon their little feathered pets at a moment when they can bring such joy and brightness into life, and by their song and merry ways gladden our sorrowing hearts. Only this week I have had a letter from a fancier in Belgium who asks me to continue sending his paper to him, because, although all his family have gone off to the front, he still has his birds; he would feel lost without it, and the risk of not getting his paper is a small one compared to the others with which he is surrounded. Let us take a lesson from this brave old man, and where by physical disability or age or sex we are unable to actively interest ourselves in military or naval defence, we can help to bring about normal conditions by carrying on in our usual way, following our peaceful hobbies, and thus help to provide a wholesome antidote to depressing or exciting news from the seat of war. We shall have something to say next week as to a proposal to provide all the temporary hospitals now being arranged for with singing Canaries free of charge.

The annual show of the Welsh Northern Counties F. and F.A. will be held at Llandudno on Nov. 7.

Please notify my change of address from Desmond Street to 10, Longwood Avenue, Dublin, writes Mr. Arthur J. Whitty.

The secretary of the Torbay (Paignton) O.S. writes that they will not hold their annual open and members' show on Oct. 21st.

Please make it known through CAGE BIRDS that Guisborough Priory has cancelled its open show date for the present.—Wm. Waraker, Sec.

At a meeting of the Cumberland and Westmorland Y.C.C., held Aug. 5, writes Mr. R. W. Pearson, Treas., our secretary resigned owing to pressure of business, and J. Head was appointed. All business in connection with the society in future must be addressed to J. Head, 12, Mill St., Maryport.

Ramsden's peppers for the present season (samples of which have just reached us) are once again superlatively good. The tasteless pepper we have never seen excelled for depth and brilliancy of colour, while its purity is guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Act—its wholesomeness, indeed, is apparent to both taste and smell. Birds should thrive on it, and that they will moult out the requisite "red-hot" tonic of colour goes without saying. The hot Natal pepper is also a wonderful sample for colour properties, and will come as a boon to those who favour its use. For prices consult our advertisement column.

ALL FANCIERS who wish to moult out their Canaries in the highest possible condition and fit them for the show-bench should close with the offer appearing on page 72 this week.

Stoppage of "Bird Life."

Mrs. Comyns-Lewer's Gallant Struggle Ended by the War.

AFTER a nearly nine years' battle for success with "Canary and Cage Bird Life," Mrs. Comyns-Lewer has found the difficulties confronting her in connection with the war so serious as to cause her to stop its publication. Last week's number contained a "Farewell" notice of so interesting a character that we reprint the following extracts from it:—

With this issue "Bird Life" ceases. "The least said the soonest mended," and consequently we shall not waste much time or space in stating a very obvious fact. The conclusion has been very much precipitated by the War, in which all Europe is now involved. Already the difficulties of getting suitable paper for printing and despatching copies when printed are assailing all newspaper proprietors, and as it is very important that "The Feathered World" should not suffer in any way, we have decided definitely to stop publishing "Bird Life."

We at all events retire from the field knowing that we have done our utmost for the fancy, and that it is the fancy that has failed us. Perhaps some day they may recall our words and regret the poor support they have given us.

To those who—unfortunately in the minority have done all they could to help the paper we return our most heartfelt thanks.

We have made arrangements to have queries on cage-birds answered in "The Feathered World," but unfortunately the pressure on our space there is so great that we cannot do more; but at all times Mr. Robson will be glad to give advice and help in any way he can.

Nothing now remains but to again say

FAREWELL!

We cannot let this occasion pass without putting on record our sincere regrets at Mrs. Lewer's non-success. We say this without humbug or cant. Her methods in competing with CAGE BIRDS have always been straightforward and stimulating, and we feel that in her very failure there is a note of dignity that is characteristic of the woman and her work. Few other persons in the publishing business would for so long a period have faced such disappointing results week after week, year after year. Her determination was never for an instant weakened by set-backs that would have made others of the opposite sex abandon the attempt long ago. And it is only now when faced by overwhelming and insuperable odds entirely outside anyone's ability to cope with that she is forced to abandon her attempt. Such an adversary as this is worth meeting, and we could have wished her a better reward.

Mrs. Lewer in the past has had some hard things to say about CAGE BIRDS and its founder, and no doubt CAGE BIRDS and its founder have in the course of conflict had some hard things to say of Mrs. Lewer and "Bird Life." But this is not the moment for raking up old sores. Rather would we shake hands and let by-gones be by-gones. In no spirit of patronage, but that of honest admiration, we applaud unstintingly the woman who has done as much for the bird fancy as anyone living, and who has, nonetheless certain human weaknesses, no superior amongst us for honesty of purpose, highness of aim, and inflexibility of spirit.

In the present state of the country all petty trade rivalries and competitions sink into oblivion. Mrs. Lewer has given her only son for the service of his country, and one of her daughters, too, has taken a post of danger. The whole cage bird world will join with us in wishing them both God speed on their missions of defence and mercy and a speedy and safe return to their mother's arms.

A Confiding Kingfisher.

The following incident was told me by Mr. Aldridge, of Hadleigh, Suffolk:—On August 5 he was fishing with a friend in the river Brett below Layman Mill. He had just caught an eel, which was trying to unhook, when his friend called to him: "Look here!" As the eel took up all his attention he did not look up till his friend called to him again a moment or two later. Then he looked and saw a Kingfisher perched on the second joint of his friend's rod, which he was holding in his hand. The bird stayed there for a minute or so and then flew off.—T. H. Dipnall in "Country Life."

Bird Protection in New Zealand.

It is interesting to hear of the formation in New Zealand of an organisation entitled the Forest and Bird Protection Society, with headquarters at Wellington. The objects are (a) the conservation of wild nature by inculcating among the public, especially the children, an interest in the native flora and fauna, and the protection and preservation thereof; (b) the conservation of any forest growing on roadsides, on the banks of rivers, and on other public lands, and the protection of the same as far as possible; (c) the setting aside as public reserves any privately owned forest lands which are in danger of being destroyed; (d) assisting any movement taken for the purpose of protecting any area of land covered with forest; (e) assisting any movement for the protection of any native birds or animals.

A Young Bird's Triumphs.

Permit me to thank you for your courtesy in illustrating my young ticked yellow Yorkshire. Since winning at Penge under Mr. Norman the same bird secured 1st and sp. at Dulwich and Peckham, Mr. Robson judging, and 1st and silver medal at the L. and P.O.S. show, Mr. Gardner, placing the awards.—J. S. Fairman (London, S.E.).

Shooting Outgoing Pigeons.

A City man advises farmers and others in the Eastern Counties to shoot outgoing pigeons, which, he considers, are now the only means of communication between England and Germany. It is well known that in the German secret service Carrier Pigeons are used, and it will be remembered that last week a German trawler, seized by a British warship off the Orkneys, had Carrier Pigeons on board.—"The Standard."

The Green C.A. Campaign.

Our next meeting is Aug. 25, at Oldham Hill, Renshow St., Liverpool, writes Mr. F. Handley, the sec., 23, Coventry Road, Wavertree, Liverpool. It is specially for allotting patronage in novice section. Will novices please note. We have several applications already. Any further applications should be in before the above date for either champion or novice sections. We have many specials to allot in both. Green Canary fanciers please rally round; the show season is close at hand. Any information as to membership, etc., can be had from me.

A Curious Coincidence.

On May 22, 1911, I marked with rings two adult Razorbills on the Island of Rosevere, Isles of Scilly, writes "H.W.R." in a contemporary, those two being the only ones I succeeded in capturing. One of the rings bore the number 31,310. On May 19 last I visited the island for the second time, and although assisted by two boatmen could only capture one adult Razorbill, owing to the depth of the rock holes. This bird was under the same rock as was the one I marked there three years before; not only this, it was the identical bird, for it bore upon its leg the ring numbered 31,310. The central 3 was worn away, and the ring was almost off. For the bird had got the overlap undone, and it came off the leg quite easily, so easily that it is a wonder the bird had not got it off itself. It is indeed curious that of the hundreds, if not thousands, of Razorbills nesting on this island the only one to be captured should be one of the two I marked there three years all but three days before! I replaced the ring with one numbered 32,840.

Users of colour-foods, writes Mr. J. W. Ramsden (11, Josephine Avenue, Brixton, S.W.) had better at once secure the stock they will require to last through the season, as owing to the present state of affairs it seems that it will not be possible for me to obtain more from the growers, and my own stock, thanks to the excellent demand there has been for my peppers, is already getting very low.

OBITUARY.

Mr. Harry Allen, Leeds.

We regret to hear from Mr. Fred Allen, of Leeds, of the death of his father, Mr. Harry Allen, who died on Sunday last, after only three days' illness. Mr. H. Allen has long been known as an expert in all matters appertaining to Linnets, especially in respect of singing contests. When he was taking an active part in these contests his Linnets were famous throughout the Leeds district, but latterly he had practically confined his energies to dealing, and had acquired a good reputation among owners of all kinds of British and foreign birds and Canaries.

Mr. W. J. Veasey, Rugby.

It is with deepest sympathy, writes Mr. C. H. Webb, that I have to announce the death of Mr. W. J. Veasey, the late sec. of the Rugby C.B.A., who passed away on Aug. 5 after a prolonged illness. His death has cast a gloom over the whole district. Mr. Veasey was a very valuable and energetic member of the Rugby C.B.A. The association has not only been indebted to him for his services as secretary, but also for his ready and experienced help so ungrudgingly given in the Fancy; he was always willing to assist a novice. I know I am voicing the sentiments of all fanciers in tendering to his sorrowing widow our heartfelt sympathy in her sad bereavement. Mr. Veasey was interred at New Bilton Aug. 8. A floral tribute was sent by the members of the society, and the society was represented by Mr. P. G. Salter and myself to pay the last respect to one we can ill afford to lose.

A Deal in Rollers.

It may interest you, writes Mrs. Nellie Tyson, to know I have purchased the whole stock of Hartz Roller Canaries lately owned by Mrs. Taylor (Wimbleton) taking over the house and all the aviaries. This, with my own stock of over 200, I think will be the largest stock of English bred Rollers in anyone's hands in England.

The Avicultural Magazine, the journal of the Avicultural Society, for August, opens with an article on Flamingos by the Editor, Mr. H. D. Astley, who also concludes "My Birds at Brinsop Court." The first portion of the Flamingo article mainly consists of an extract from Sir H. Johnston's book on the Uganda Protectorate treating on the Flamingos, estimated at a million, which find their home on Lake Hannington; this is illustrated with a beautiful coloured frontispiece, and two fine photographs. In the latter part Mr. Astley writes of his own Flamingos at Brinsop Court. Dr. Butler continues his "Thirty-two years of Aviculture," the Marquis of Tavistock "Some Hints on Parrot Keeping," and Dr. Hopkinson "English Names for the Parrots." Other articles are "Notes on My Birds" by Miss Peddie Waddell, "Gannets in Confinement" Mr. J. H. Gurney, and "Notes on Wading Birds" Mr. H. L. Sich.

Birds as Prisoners of War.

Describing the scenes witnessed on the arrival of refugees in Liège, a correspondent of "The Daily Telegraph" says: "A stout gentleman, with a pointed grey beard, was inconsolable because his 'collection of little birds' had been left behind at the mercy of the Germans."

Border Fancy Canary Club.

As the time is now wearing round towards the show season, writes Mr. W. B. Smart, Hon. Sec., 13, High St., Loanhead, will all intending members please let me have their names and full postal address by the 26th inst., as the list must be in publisher's hands by the end of the month at the latest.

Searchlights and Migratory Birds.

What will be the effect upon migratory birds of the searchlights from the war vessels now guarding our coasts? Possibly when the war is ended we shall learn from naval officers of puzzled birds wheeling round the watchful ships, dashing wildly after the dazzling beams. Strong white lights from light-houses and lightships lure many birds to destruction; will these powerful flashing lights confuse them even more? There is little chance of systematic observation by those whose attention is riveted on such grave issues, but trivial incidents often make an impression on the mind of those who are most anxious or absorbed. During the Boer War one gallant officer, now, unfortunately, no more, made many useful notes on the South African fauna, says the "Manchester Guardian." The naturalist, even in the presence of death, cannot entirely forget his interests.

Young Canaries: Their Sexing, Moulting, Colour Feeding and Training.

By A. THOMAS (Frimley).

I THINK I had been breeding Canaries two or three seasons before I could select the young cocks with any certainty and even now I have to admit making a mistake occasionally. Last year out of sixty-five birds bred I judged two wrongly; and strange to say, they were both cocks that I had sold as hens. Of course my customer was very pleased and I have since heard both birds (now on full song) singing his house down.

Picking Out the Young Cocks.

Generally speaking the cocks have bolder eyes, deeper colouring on top of the head, saddle and wing butts; also a kind of "eyebrow" of richer feathers is to be seen in the cock birds. If the young birds are examined whilst young in the nest, before the feathers grow, you can take it for granted that the birds with the largest "ear-holes" are cocks.

If you watch closely you will see the cocks trying to sing when a few weeks old, and if you see the throat swelling out and pulsating it is another good sign. Some, of course, will not attempt to sing until after the moult, so don't be in too big a hurry to say "That bird is a hen." The cocks are also usually the biggest, boldest, most dominant and pushful birds, but the subtle distinctions are very hard for a novice to recognise. There is a plate in "Our Canaries" (that grand book obtainable from CAGE BIRDS offices) which shows you how to sex Canaries; you should get it and study it, also the other valuable information in this volume.

Do not allow your hens to have more than three nests in a season, unless you want to lose some of your hens in the moult. I like my hens to be finished by the end of July, so that they will be strong when the moult commences and during its progress.

When Ignorance is Folly.

The moult is the time when many Canaries are found to go wrong generally either through ignorance in feeding or taking insufficient care to guard the birds from draughts and fluctuations of temperature. Birds when moulting may be compared to a man standing at his garden gate on a cold night in his shirtsleeves. They have only part of their feathers on and for this reason must be allowed plenty of exercise, either in large cages or, better still, be turned loose in a spare room or an aviary.

When the nights are long I keep a light burning in my birdroom until about eight o'clock so that the birds can see to feed and drink. I again turn the light on by seven in the morning, if it is not already light. I consider that in mid-winter, for instance, when it is dark by 4.30 p.m. and remains dark till about 7.50 a.m. the birds are kept too long without food (15 hours).

The food should be more nourishing, too, during the moult and winter than at any other time of the year. I look round to see which birds are suitable for colour-feeding. Those with feather of a nice soft silky texture show its effects best. I place the cocks in a large flight and the hens in another. If I see one of the cocks getting too disagreeable I cage him alone. Those birds that are not being colour-fed I place in the largest cages I have.

They all get the same staple diet, viz., best Spanish canary seed, with every other day a teaspoonful per bird of summer rape, and twice a week a teaspoonful of a mixture of two parts each hemp and niga, one part each black rape, linseed and millet, half part maw. Twice a week I give a little egg and bread (or biscuit) sprinkled with maw seed and a pinch of Demerara sugar. Once a week I give a little castor oil in their egg-food, and occasionally I give the birds milk sop instead of the egg-food.

Colour-feeding and Its Effects.

I have often been asked if I thought that colour-feeding was injurious to the birds. My reply is, emphatically, No. I have colour-fed a bird at ten years old and he was as lively as a cricket all through, taking the colour well. It is seldom I have to record a death in my birdroom and I know I have not had more colour-fed birds die than "natural" fed ones.

Here is my method: I make my egg-food in the ordinary way of one egg, one slice of bread half-inch thick (or the equivalent in biscuits), and about four teaspoonfuls of pepper. The latter is mixed in well. It consists of one part hot Natal to eight parts of tasteless (or "cold") pepper. I remove the seed twice daily for an hour to ensure them eating it all up.

I put no bird in the colour-feeding cages until I see signs of approaching moult. This can usually be told by the bird appearing listless and drowsy; sometimes it will have its head under its wing in the daytime. Plenty of loose feathers will be seen in the bottom of the cage when the moult proper starts. I continue with the same strength colour-food from start to finish.

If "Stuck" in the Moult.

Should I find a bird stuck in the moult I remove it from the position it is then in and either put it higher or lower or to some other side of the room. This generally starts him off again. The colour-fed birds also get milk sop once a week and this is sprinkled with maw seed, when the birds eat it more readily. A little sulphate of iron (about the size of a pea) should be given in the drinking water. It is a good tonic and fixes the colour.

A piece of beef suet will help to tighten up the plumage and a little boiled carrot is much enjoyed. For "green-food" I give a little sweet apple or banana. I always gather a lot of ripe plantain stalks during the season and I find they all like them. These little "tit-bits" will be well repaid in the breeding season by the extra good condition of your pets, for a bird out of condition is no use to anybody.

Don't forget the bath on all suitable days. It produces that beautiful sheen we all so much admire. Give cold water; it is better for them. I always draw the blind in my birdroom during the moult, but leave the room so that the birds are able to see and feed. A yellow blind is the best.

Training for the Show Bench.

Having got the best birds sorted out and caged separately, we should proceed to hang a show cage on the front of the stock cage, so as to get the bird used to it. This can be done by a few small hooks made from ordinary cage wire. Try to get the bird to run from one cage to the other without handling, using, if necessary a small stick inserted through the wires of the cage. Most birds if you place a little egg-food in the show cage, will run into it as soon as they see it hung on the stock cage, expecting, of course, to get a "tit-bit."

It is quite impossible for anybody to judge a bird that seems to try to kill itself by dashing against the wires of the cage immediately the judge approaches it; hence you must get it steady. There is only one way of doing this. You must gain the bird's confidence by talking to it, and every time it sees you your hand should contain something the bird is very fond of. Talk to the bird each time you offer it this "tit-bit" and you will be surprised at the difference in a few days time. The bird will be glad to see you coming.

You must be very careful to keep the birds clean. Offer a bath every day, so that they may go to at least two shows before having to be washed. At the same time, do not send a dirty bird; you will be wasting your entry fee, carriage, and everything else.

If your bird gets a bit down in condition during the show season give him every other day a teaspoonful of the following: Linseed, niger, gold of pleasure, and maw seed mixed in equal parts. On the days you are not offering this seed mixture give a little milk sop.

HOW TO CHEAPEN THE FOOD BILL.

Hints that may be useful to Bird-keepers during the present War crisis!

By G. E. WESTON.

I HAVE met many fanciers recently ("birds of a feather"; you know the rest), and for once in a way our conversation has not been entirely monopolised by tales of our birds. We have talked mainly—need I say it?—about the War. It is a truly terrible business, and none can tell when or in what it will end.

But we can all strive to be optimistic—thank goodness I was born that way!—indeed, it is our bounden duty to ourselves and to our neighbours to look in the present crisis upon the bright side of things. Commend me to the British race to pull through in double quick time when "up against it." And the Cage Bird Fancy and its followers will sure enough pull through too.

I hope that the officials and members of societies which hold open shows will not get into a "panicky" condition, and see a need for cancelling their fixtures when no such need in reality exists. Railway traffic was bound to suffer disorganisation under the stress of moving troops and war stores. But this will quickly settle down. It will not be long before life in this country resumes its normal course. And it will not be long either—please God—before the triumph of our allied forces comes to pass.

Let us "Keep Cool."

Show officials should not be hasty to act. Let us "keep cool." Let us also remember that CAGE BIRDS stands ready to assist us in every possible way to hold our shows if there is the least glimmer of hope that the fixtures can be successfully gone through with.

I am wandering from my subject, however. This was suggested to me by the remarks of my fancier friends. While they, one and all, were confident as to the Fancy emerging as strong as ever from the present upset, almost without exception they said: "What a pity the price of seed, and especially canary seed, should have been so high, and is now certain to go up still higher!"

Economy, of course, should be the ruling note at this juncture in all our domestic affairs. And so it occurred to me that a few notes on how bird-lovers can economise in the up-keep of their pets might not come amiss. I may have no important message to convey to the "old hands" (I am fast getting an "old" hand myself) but to others I hope to be able to point out one or two ways in which they can bring down the food bill of their pets, and without, I promise them, any sacrifice of health or condition in the birds.

An item which at the present moment affects many of us is that of colour-feeding. At the best of times one hears it condemned as being "unnecessary and costly." With the first count in this indictment I have no concern. I do not "set the fashion." As regards the question of cost, however, I think much can be said on the other side.

Even those birds which have the misfortune to be born into the world worthy of no better description than "songsters" can be enhanced in value by being colour-fed, and enhanced to a degree which leaves a fair margin of profit when the cost of the pepper and the trouble of administering it have been taken into consideration. Ask any dealer which "songsters" take the customer's eye—the non-fed or the colour-fed. Both dealer and customer will always pay more for the latter. But all this is by-the-way.

When Eggs Spell Money!

One of my friends told me that he was half-a-mind to give up colour-feeding this season: "Look at the price of reliable eggs," he said, "and I've got so many birds, too."

"Well, why use eggs?" I asked him. He looked surprised and replied: "Don't you?"

I told him that I had not used eggs (meaning new-laid, hard-boiled eggs) over a period of several years, either for colour-feeding or for rearing my Canaries and Mules and Hybrids. And neither is it necessary so to do. The making of colour-food fresh every day with hard-boiled eggs is just one of many processes, hallowed by tradition, from which fanciers seem afraid to depart, notwithstanding the trouble and expense involved.

One of the most successful breeders and exhibitors of Norwich Plainheads of my acquaintance uses simply moistened bread as the vehicle to convey the colour into his birds. His birds are excelled by none in depth of colour, or in the sheen they carry on their plumage. Of course, he also breeds for colour, and he is careful to get a reliable colour-food—points, these, of vastly greater importance than many seem to realise.

Now there can be no cheaper, and few easier, methods than the above; and seeing that it is so successful in his case, there can be no reason why others should not adopt it with satisfaction.

He cuts the necessary quantity of bread from a good-quality white loaf, three or more days' old. He sweetens with common brown sugar (known, I believe, as "moist" sugar; demerara, of course, could not be beaten), sufficient comfortably-warm water to well soak the bread. The soaked and sweetened bread he places in a clean towel and squeezes as dry as possible. He then mixes in the colour-food and proceeds to feed his birds. They eat it as readily as my two "young hopefuls" devour "creamy" toffee!

The Gathering of Thistle Seed.

Sir,—As there are thistles in great quantity about here, I should like to learn from some of your readers the best way to take the seed out. Is it possible to get a small machine to do it?

Preparing Linnets for Contest Singing.

Sir,—If Mr. J. Houghton will let you publish his address, or will send same direct to me, I will forward him a seed mixture which is supposed to bring Linnets forward for contest singing. I may say I have not tried it myself, as I have not kept Linnets for singing, only keeping Canaries, so I do not care to publish the recipe in "C.B." owing to not having given it a trial myself. My address is with the Editor.

Can a Clear Mule be Bred from a Hen Goldfinch and Cock Canary?

Sir,—During my experience in breeding mules and Hybrids I have three or four times tried the cross of yellow cock Canary and hen Goldfinch. I have got Mules from this crossing, but never one good enough to make a show bird, nearly all of them have been very ordinary dark ones. This might have happened because I used only ordinary yellow cocks. Had I used a strain which had been bred for a few years the results might have been different. This is my view of my own success; perhaps some of your readers may have had different results, if so I should very much like to have their views of this important subject. The season will soon be over, so some will be able to chronicle their experience. Perhaps some of your Scotch readers might have been successful. My opinion is that even if you did get a clear Mule, it would not be so large as one bred in the usual way; i.e., Goldfinch-Canary, not Canary-Goldfinch.

The "Order of the Push" at Abertillery.

Sir,—I crave a small space against the unmanly attack on the officials of the Abertillery C.B.S. I think it would have been more to your correspondents' honour if they had heard both sides first, but they formed their ideas on Mr. Moule's statements, which our worthy secretary refuted last week. I have tried the whole of this year to find out what Mr. Moule is dissatisfied about, and I must admit that in the meetings and when talking to Mr. Moule when it comes to facts I have failed to find any grounds for his conduct. He has had just the same fair play in the meetings as everyone else, but he is always thinking there is a certain number always against him. The officials of the Society understand their work better than those who are writing against them. When you have men coming about six miles to a meeting and then finding one member upsetting everything, well, what were our officers to do? There seems only one thing, and that is to make Mr. Moule secretary, and that will put things right.

JUSTICE.

Sir,—In reply to the defender of the Abertillery C.B.S., I beg to make an apology for the little error when I stated the numbers at the meeting mentioned. I may say that I had these numbers given me by a member who attended both, so the error was not on my part. He remarks that I was not thrown out in five minutes; that it took three months. On this point I consider he has given the secret away, and brings my remark true about there being a clique. One word about the deputation that was picked to see me about upsetting their meetings. What a shame! They came to ask me to resign, or not disturb the meetings, because I told them to their faces that there was a clique in the meetings. They chose three to see me, the defender being one; but he did not have enough courage to come. His remark that the meetings I attended were not ruled as they ought to be, does not speak well of the chair, does it? He does not speak correctly when he states that I ridiculed the Chairman and that I interrupted the speakers. If this is the other side of the affair, so much for it, as "Well Wisher's" statement that I like to probe things to the bottom is quite right. The defender says that I upset their meeting; from beginning to end. Let us have the truth. What I had to say I generally left to the last, and what I did say upset a few. As "Well Wisher" says, let us have business above board and things would be much better. This is the root of all the trouble. I myself do not make the disturbance at the meetings, but those who are against me. "Well Wisher" states that I am not the only one that has had the "push" from the A.C.B.S. That is quite right; there are some I know who have left because there was not any fair play. About my expulsion: There is no rule to justify it. There is a rule that says that if a member is accused of slandering another outside the meetings, if he cannot prove to the contrary he shall be expelled. Now what I have said has been said at the meetings. What more can I do than say it to their faces?

Net Making Made Easy.

Sir,—Now the catching season will soon be here, and at various time readers are asking how to make bird nets, I will try to explain how the knot is tied. First, get a piece of string about 2ft. long, and tie the ends together, so as to make a loop marked A, then hang it on a hook or tie it round the back of a chair so that you can reach it comfortably sitting down. Then fasten a thread to loop A, place your mesh B straight along, bring thread over the top of mesh and round under third finger, marked C, and under mesh B. Place thread under thumb D, then throw thread out so as to make a loop over loop A. Bring it round again under mesh B, and round little finger E. Now pass the needle over the top of second finger F, but under thread, also under mesh, so as to bring it out between mesh and thread G, and through loop A. Having done this you can let thread off third finger C, also under thumb D, but keep the thread tight on little finger

Mr. Bunting's Method of Making Nets.

E; this is the only one you need trouble about, as the knot will not tie until you let it go, so keep your mesh up close to loop A and then pull thread, and let it slip off little finger, and pull it up tight; you will find you have tied the knot in loop A. Continue doing this until you have put on as many stitches as you require, and then slip out mesh, and you will find all loops along on loop A which you will be able to slide along. Now start again and pick up the first loop and continue all the way along, and when you have got to the end slip out mesh again. You will find it rather awkward at first, but with a little practice you will be able to knit it like a woman knitting a sock. I have made a rough sketch; where the lines are not joined together shows where they should go under, not over. I hope readers will be able to follow it, and I wish CAGE BIRDS success.

Undaunted Enthusiasm at Sheffield.

Sir,—In the interests of the Fancy and exhibitors at large, I should like to mention the success of the Sheffield Ornithological Society in connection with specialist club patronages, every one applied for having been granted, as follows:—Cinnamon Marked Yorks. C.C., Yorkshire C.C., National Green-marked Yorks. C.C., Norwich P.C., Open Norwich P.C. (the Club Show), Border Fancy C.C., Lancashire and Liz. F.A., Yorks and Lancs. British Bird and M.C., National Brit. Bird and M.C., Foreign B.C., Foreign Bird Exhibitors' League (with guarantee of special class for Green Budgerigars). We are only waiting now for the members of the above clubs and exhibitors generally to give us a bumping entry, and we shall do the rest. Full prize-money paid in every class, and specials for all sections.

Another Wonderful Case of a Bird's Return Home.

A Linnet Roams the Fields and Woods during the Daytime, and at Night goes into its Cage.

Sir,—The following was written last week by "A. N. S." to "The Scotsman." It shows very plainly what wild birds think of their cruel captors and their prisons! "Our household pets include a Goldfinch and a Linnet. These were caught in the country, but both have moulted in the house. The Linnet contracted a disease we could not cure, and, after days of discussion, it was decided to give the bird its liberty. It was our view that, being a wild bird, it might be able to secure some natural remedy for its trouble. Whether we were right in this must be left to surmise, but anyhow, we opened the cage on Sunday last (June 21st) and the Linnet disappeared. This would be about noon. During the afternoon one of our family said he thought he heard the Linnet's voice in the avenue. As we live in the country, little heed was given to the remark, Linnets being seen in our neighbourhood any day in the year.

On Monday and Tuesday more direct evidence was received of the Linnet's presence, and our family as a whole concluded that our house-bird was actually hovering in the vicinity of our doorstep. On five mornings we hang out the Goldfinch's cage. On Wednesday morning the Linnet was on the ridge of our door-porch, calling loudly, while the Goldfinch answered back in his own language. Strange to say, there is a distinct resemblance between these two birds' call-notes. In a wild state this is not so; but perhaps the birds having been so long together the one had come to imitate the notes of its mate. After an hour or so the Linnet disappeared, and was not again observed until well on in the afternoon. It had taken up a commanding position on a stone wall skirting the public road. A great deal of motor and other traffic passed within a few yards of its site, but it was quite unconcerned. Later in the day it roamed the woods round about the house, but by six o'clock we could hear it whistling in a birch tree within a dozen yards of our door.

We decided to hang up the empty cage by the doorway, and we did this about seven o'clock, at the same time taking the Goldfinch indoors for the day. We were surprised to see the Linnet settle on a small climbing plant near the cage, and by a series of short flights at last enter the cage, and immediately begin to feed. We had omitted to put water inside, so one of the family approached and replenished the dish. The Linnet kept to its perch meanwhile quite unconcerned. It was decided to leave the door of the cage open. After remaining for about half-an-hour, the bird once more flew away. An hour later it reappeared, evidently intending to take up its quarters in the cage for the night. Once more, however, we missed it, and for the rest of the evening it was not seen. Before breakfast time on Thursday it was again in the vicinity of the cage, and as I write it seems quite evident that this bird, although wild by nature, intends to make its old cage its roosting and feeding resort, although allowed to fly outside at its own sweet will.

A. McWATT.

HOW DID BIRDS ORIGINATE?

No Evidence of Definite Nature.

Sir,—I am pleased to see Mr. J. I. Hargreaves does not believe in evolution, and I am glad to see he has quoted the highest authority on the subject. There are different interpretations of the Bible account of the Creation, but I have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Hargreaves' interpretation is the correct one. I have discussed this subject before. My main opponents were Dr. Butler and Mr. Allen Silver, but I have proved over and over again that I am streets ahead of them as a reliable ornithologist. I maintain that species are special creations. Our present knowledge of birds is that every species produces its own kind (it has never been proved otherwise) when paired to its own kind. If all the birds on the face of the earth evolved from one pair their song and nests would all be practically the same, but that is not the case. The late Mr. Wallace, who was a strong evolutionist, maintained that birds build their nests by imitation, which goes dead against his own theory. How on earth could birds build their first nests by imitation when there were no nests to imitate? Birds build their nests instinctively, which goes dead against the evolution theory. I don't know how evolutionists get over these difficulties. Although Mr. K. Wells has proved that a reptilian-like bird existed at some remote period, there is no evidence of a definite nature to prove that birds evolved from reptiles.

Beith

JOHN CRAIG.

The Evolution Theory Upheld.

Sir,—As an evolutionist I have been greatly interested in the above discussion. A bird could not be produced from a reptile directly, but I quite expected to see some of the intermediate forms of bird, animal and reptile life instanced. Take the common Bat; it has a mouth, not a beak, and is absolutely featherless, its outer covering, especially the wings, resembling the web of a frog's foot. The Owl, too, can hardly be called a true bird. There are numerous kinds of birds which cannot fly, although possessing wings. There are some very much like a duck with very small wings and a covering of fur. There are evidences which go to show that all had a common origin. Some of your correspondents poke fun at the idea, which surely is not harder to believe than that all humanity descended from two originally created parents. I grant that there are still some who believe the latter even in these enlightened days, but certainly none of our university professors or highly educated men generally.

If Mr. J. C. Wilmot had only a rudimentary knowledge of anatomy and evolution he would not ask what has become of "tails." He would know that none of the anthropoid apes (which are merely big monkeys) has a tail, while in all humans the spinal column finishes with a point like a tail, which is turned inwards, and in many cases the muscles for moving a tail are present, but for lack of use have become rudimentary. The evolutionist does not compare a monkey with the highest form of man, a being whose mysterious and innate desire for self-improvement has been working slowly but surely for countless ages by the refining influences of spiritual culture. No, he compares the highest form of ape with the lowest forms of humanity. Will Mr. J. C. Wilmot tell me whether the Aborigines of Australia were humans or not, and, if not, what were they? They wore no dress, had no language, were incapable of lighting a fire, and were not equal to some apes intellectually or in many other ways. The Tasmanians, considered to be the lowest form of humanity ever known, are now extinct, "crowded out" by higher forms of life.

W. WATSON.

Up Against the Scientists.

Sir,—Mr. Wells' imaginative conjecture is that we are all descended from minute jelly-like creatures—how credulous some people are! Mr. Wells seems to write as if he were certain that no animal but birds has feathers for a covering. Has he ever examined some of the larger moths? Some of them are covered by feathers which can be seen by the naked eye; and as I have never seen it stated that they are in anyway connected with birds, I don't see why the "archæopteryx" should necessarily be the missing link between birds and reptiles because there was an imprint of feathers in the fossilised mud.

Mr. Savage is evidently one of those people who think that the man in the street is incapable of thinking for himself, and mentally grasping the nature of the theories propounded by scientists; and regards their unbelieving interference as an intrusion. He might just as well dis-burden his mind of the thought, because there are many men who haven't had scientific training who are capable of asking themselves questions about the different theories; while he convicts himself of allowing others to think for him when he says that he will be ready to accept the British Association's dictum on evolution. He unwittingly and unconsciously knocks a tack in the coffin of the evolution theory when he says that "if a man had been intended for an upright pose there would have been bones or some protection round his abdomen." When we consider the thousands of years that man has inhabited this earth in an upright position, isn't it an argument against evolution when the Creator—or whatever is supposed to cause evolution—has not seen fit to provide the human frame with this protection, seeing that Mr. Savage says we should be able to digest better? Not that we have anything to complain about in the way of digestive organs. I think the human animal manages to live as long as most, and rather longer than some, which doesn't speak badly for our anatomical construction. I had wished to make a few more observations on the subject, but seeing that so many correspondents have interested themselves in the controversy, and they all want space, I will leave them for a later date.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

This very clever fancy costume (contrived from "Cage Birds" coloured plates) won second prize in a Carnival against close on 100 competitors. The top of the umbrella was also decorated with bird pictures. See letter on this page.

A Successful Fancy Dress.

SIR,—Enclosed please find photos of my daughter, 10 years old, who won a second prize at the Nailsworth horse show and sports, in the fancy dress carnival. She was dressed in a home-made costume, to represent the CAGE BIRDS. The entries altogether for the carnival numbered about a hundred. We took the idea from seeing a picture in your paper. The dress was made from the cut-out pictures from your coloured plates, and looked grand in the sun. The hair was dressed to represent a nest with eggs in it (note back view).

Good Results from Use of Egg and Bread Substitute.

SIR,—Seeing that Mr. Chiswell was asking for any results of the use of his egg food, the recipe for which he gave through CAGE BIRDS in February, perhaps he would like to know that I have had very good results. My hens have fed better with this food than with the ordinary egg and biscuit. One hen which refused to feed last year has this year been one of the best of mothers, and I say it is the use of Mr. Chiswell's food that has made her feed. After having given this food a trial, I told a friend of mine, who was having bad results through his hens not feeding, to try it, and I am pleased to say his hens have fed very well indeed. I also told two other fanciers, but am not able to say how they have got on with it, as I have not since seen them to ask for results.
A. W. HOWARTH.

[The recipe was as follows:—Take 1lb. of the finest ground whole wheat-meal. Make a stiff dough of it with as many fresh eggs as the meal will absorb. Bake it for three hours. Grate it and dry it in an oven; or cut it in slices and grind it in a machine or with a rolling pin. This dry egg-food keeps for years and is always ready for use. Of this egg-food you may give half-a-teaspoonful every day, after having been moistened with a little water. In this egg-food (or egg-bread) are from six to eight eggs per lb. of whole-meal, according to size of eggs. No water or any other fluid is used when making the dough. This egg-food you may make in the spring when eggs are cheap and fresh. I have used it for many years.—THOS. CHISWELL.]

Fertile "Peas."

A Novelty (nearly) in Hybrid Breeding.

SIR,—A novelty has occurred this year which might interest your numerous readers, for I very much question anyone having had the same experience. I have had a cock Canary up with a hen Goldfinch, which laid normal eggs last year, when not put up with any other bird; no doubt had she been paired up with a cock of her own species she would have raised some young in a cage. The hen was lent me this year for me to try and breed from her. The cock Canary paired well with her, and she built several nests in different parts of the cage bottom, and at last she laid in one of the old-fashioned wooden nest boxes. Now the strangest part is she laid three eggs which were the smallest I have ever seen; no larger than small peas. At first I thought it would be useless letting her sit upon them, as the eggs would be clear, but as I always like to try experiments I let her sit upon them the full time. As they did not hatch out I broke them and found that each one was fertile, but the embryos had died at about ten days. Perhaps some of your readers may account for this strange freak, if so I should very much like their ideas. Since then she has laid again and the eggs were the normal size for a Goldfinch. She was caught as a young bird just left the nest two years ago; she is a fair size for a hen Goldfinch. There is nothing that I can think of to account for her laying such small eggs, and the eggs being fertile as well. One would expect them to be clear. When I have previously had small eggs laid by any birds, Canaries or Finches, I have always sat them to test them, but have found them clear; such experiments as these I always like to try. If I could have raised them I expect they would have turned out midgets and worthless, but I should certainly have liked to see the results from such freak eggs.

ANON.

How Is This From One Hen Canary?

SIR,—I have one pair of Canaries which have hatched and reared 19 young from four nests (three fives and a four), all of which are doing well. I may say the first nest hatched out on March 6, and the fourth on July 10. I have now the same hen sitting again on five eggs. So I think this will take a lot of beating from one pair. I have gathered most of my knowledge from your valuable paper CAGE BIRDS, and wish it every success.

Cuckoo's Eggs in Finch Nests.

Softbills Found to be Favoured.

SIR,—As one who has lived in the country most of my life, and always been fond of nesting and watching the ways and habits of wild birds—particularly so in the nesting season, I can say that during my experience I have only once found a Cuckoo's egg in a Finch nest. That Finch was a Chaffinch; but whether the Chaffinch ever raised that Cuckoo I am not able to say. All the Cuckoo's eggs which I have found have been deposited in Soft-billed birds' nests, that is if you take the Buntings as Softbills, which you might do so to a certain extent. I should not like to say that the Bullfinch would not raise a young cuckoo. In my time I have raised many a young cuckoo and nothing seemed to come amiss to it as regards food; it would eat nearly everything, and was always crying for more. Long after they could feed themselves they wanted me to feed them. Only once have I found a nest with two Cuckoo's eggs in it, and that was a Robin's nest, but only one Cuckoo lived, the other was thrown out of the nest when young.

Secretary of the Southern Border F.C. Leaves for the Front

SIR,—I shall be glad if you will allow me a little space to explain to members of the Southern Border Fancy Club who have written me and have not received a reply, that it is not for want of courtesy on the part of the secretary. During the terrible crisis this country is passing through my patriotism compelled me to offer my services to King and country, and without the slightest warning my regiment has been ordered away to an unknown destination. I regret it was impossible to notify any of the officials or committee of the club, and the suddenness of the need must be the excuse for any seeming lack of courtesy on my part. I hope it will not be long before I am again among fancier friends. Meanwhile any correspondence addressed to me at 126, Lee Road, Lee Green, will be attended to, and I will straighten up arrears as soon as possible. I intend at an early date to call a committee meeting to appoint a secretary pro tem., and any further business can then be discussed. I hope all members have had a good season, and that, in spite of all, there will be shows held as usual, where we shall once again be able to test the merits of each other's birds.

The Illness of Mr. J. F. Hills, the Veteran Judge.

SIR,—I am glad to find that our old friend, Mr. J. F. Hills, has been cheered by the letter of sympathy, recently sent him, signed by a number of his old comrades in the Fancy. I hope all the fanciers who put their names to the letter will kindly consider this as an acknowledgment.
G. CRABB.

Dear Mr. Crabb,—I have seen Mr. Hills this morning, and he asked me to write you and express his deep gratitude to yourself and all the kind friends who recently sent him the letter of good wishes; he had hoped to have written you personally, but finds he is unable to do so. This proof of the good feeling of so many old friends came so utterly unexpected that he is unable to adequately express his great appreciation of the kindly thought that has so cheered him. I am glad to say I found him very cheerful and happy to-day.

Total number of points: Riseborough 95, Smith 37, Davison 43, Rawson 35, Proctor 33, Waters 30, Walker 22, Swan 11, Brown 8, Johnson 7, Gray 6, Owen 3. Arrangements have been made with Messrs Keenlside to supply colour food to members at 1s. 4d. per lb. (not less than 1lb.); it can only be obtained by giving name and address at the time of purchase. Prize money for N.F. shows will be paid out at our next meeting.—J. Peacock, Hon. Sec.

DONCASTER C.B.S.

Third annual show, Aug. 3, in conjunction with the Woodlands Horticultural Society, with a very good entry for the time of the year, 97 in 20 classes. Yorks. were well to the front in numbers. Hemsworth fanciers had a regular field day, taking all the firsts and special. In Norwich some excellent birds were staged by Messrs. Twine, Smith, Evans, Graham and Flint, Mr. Twine taking sp. most points, and cup (presented by Mr. F. Barker) for best young bird confined to Woodlands and Doncaster. Special winners, classes 1, to 4, Yorks., Taylor; Nor., Twine; Crest and C.B., Twine; Brit., Blanchon, Pogmore, and Bescoby. Mr. Mundell, Bradford, judged and gave general satisfaction.

HOWDEN-LE-WEAR.

A nice little collection of birds turned up Aug. 8, and quality was good. Nicely staged in the tent devoted to the needle-work and arts section, they were a great attraction. Mr. W. Turnbull made an excellent sec., and the stewards, Messrs. Bateman, Varty, Trotter, Sample, Corner, Foester, Collier, Luck, English, and Sanderson, had all the arrangements well in hand. Mr. C. A. House judged.

UPPER RHONDDA C.B.S.

Second F.F. Show July 30, Cardiff Arms Hotel. Mr. Brown, Cardiff, judged, and his awards were received with every satisfaction. Entries did not come up as expected, many members not having birds to show, and others only a few, but what was lost in quantity was gained in quality. The hon. sec., Mr. E. Richards, who was unable to attend through an illness, was much missed, but we hope that he will soon be on the road to recovery. Some splendid specimens were staged. Total entries 56. Mr. H. Watts won rose bowl most points with four ring birds, also diploma for best Yorks.; Mr. F. Bees diploma for best Mule or Hybrid; Messrs. Curtis and Son diploma best Brit. with a very fine Waxwing.

DONCASTER C.B.S.

Meeting, Aug. 8, Black Bull, Mr. Blanchon presiding. Decided to have following classes at open show. Jan. 9: Yorks. 14, Nor. 11, Crest and C.B. 4, Liz. 4, Sell. 3, Mules and Hyb. 3, Brit. 11, For. 3, Total 53. Also decided to hold annual members' show separately in November.—G. Hunt, Hon. Sec.

PORTH AND RHONDDA VALLEY.

Meeting Aug. 8, headquarters; not many attended, owing, no doubt, to the state the country is in over the war, which I hope will soon be over. Mr. A. H. C. Legg offered to give a lecture on British Birds, which I am sure every member will be pleased to hear. I hope other members will give lectures or do something to put life in the society. I am sure all members will be delighted to learn anything that may help in any way the Porth and Rhondda Valley C.B.S.—J. S. Jones, sec.

ABERTILLERY C.B.S.

Meeting held Aug. 8, Prince of Wales's Hotel, Mr. Probert presiding. Decided that sec. get books for collecting. Mr. Newell was elected a member. Decided to have same rules for the next open show as last. Mr. Prichard, treas., reported that he had sent on the presentations to Mr. J. Parfitt, the late chairman, and Mr. G. Broome, the late sec. These were framed photographs of the members of our society, with engraved silver plate attached. We are expecting a few applications for membership at next meeting, Aug. 22.—H. H. Mortimer, hon. sec.

MIDDLESBROUGH & TEES-SIDE.

Meeting Crown Hotel, Aug. 1. Mr. Watson presided over a good number and a good deal of business was got through. Schedule for open show was revised to read as follows: Yorks. classes 8, Nor. 8, Crest or C.B. 1. Selling classes 4, Mules and Hybrids 2, Brit. 9, Foreign 1, with several classes added, including field moulted in British. These are all open classes, and we have taken off all members' classes at open show. There are also 1 Yorks., 1 Nor., 1 Brit., 1 A.O.V. and 1 A.V. Canary hen open to novice members of the South Durham and North Yorks. Federations. We have taken St. John's Hall for show; it is large and well lighted and heated. Points for cup and medal: Canary cup and medal, Mr. Rand, 52 points; British, Mr. Smurthwaite, 115; Mule and Hybrid medal, Mr. Wells, 30; novice medal, Mr. Appleyard, 96. The meeting ended with questions, etc., and Mr. Bean was elected a member; there is room for more.—J. Swinco, sec.

HASTINGS & ST. LEONARDS C.B.S.

Farwell Garden Party by the President.

On July 29th the members of the society were entertained to a garden party, kindly given by the president, the Rev. J. M. Paterson and Mrs. Paterson. There was a large number present, including Mrs. Hantley, Mrs. Kirk-Bullock (V.P.), Mrs. Croft, Mrs. Slack, Mrs. Ellis, Mrs. Stevens, Miss Lumley, Miss Lawrell, Miss M. Vale, Miss O. Dawson, and Messrs. F. Slack (V.P.), C. Douch, T. West, W. Turner, T. Sherwood, J. Stevens, T. Veness, A. E. Godden, E. Olle, W. Ellis, H. Pennells, and H. Watford. Everyone regretted the unfortunate absence of the Mayor (Councillor E. Armitage Hocking) and Mr. Conway Wertheimer (both of whom are V.P.'s) and all felt the deepest sorrow and regret that shortly the society would lose its president, and to most of those present it was their final farewell. Mr. Paterson has proved the finest president the society has yet had, and he will indeed be a severe loss.

The members wandered round the beautiful grounds and visited the various aviaries in which still remain some lovely specimens of foreigners. There was great excitement over the games. All thoroughly enjoyed and appreciated the kindness and hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Paterson. After the speeches a very warm vote of thanks was carried, and the proceedings came to a close. There was great enthusiasm when the president made known his ambition to send over birds that have not yet been seen in England. The President took the opportunity of showing us all the elegant and beautiful cup which he is so generously giving to the society, and which was greatly admired. It must, indeed, have brought home to us all the sad reality that our President is soon going, and thus he will not this year compete for the Foreign cup at our annual show. Members please note, there will be a special general meeting Aug. 19; keep that date free.—I. Kirk-Bullock, hon. sec. and treas.

Singing Contests.

Announcements of forthcoming contests in the nature of advertisements must be paid for at advertisement rates, three words a penny.

Those wishing to take part in the feed who cannot attend the meeting must notify the sec.—R. Disley Hon. Sec.

CASTLEFORD.

Contest, Aug. 1, George and Dragon, Bridge Street; 16 birds entered for 4 min. time singing: 1, Smith, 82; 2, Brindley, 62; 3, Wainwright, 36. Aug. 8, 14 entered: 1, Morley, 88; 2, Smith, 64; 3, Brindley, 57.—J. Brindley, Sec.

KIPPAX.

Last special members' sing for 1914, headquarters, Commercial Hotel, Aug. 1; 33 competed. Mr. R. Plows, who has been a tryer for two years with but little success, was at last rewarded for his perseverance by winning 1st. 2nd and 3rd, J. Liversidge, our most successful member, taking 4th, 7th and 8th. J. Bath, 5 and 6, A. Cooper 9, J. Wallis 10. The prizes presented after the sing by treasurer Mr. J. Wallis gave the winners every satisfaction. Open sing, Aug. 3: 1, Bath, and a 3rd, after a dead heat with J. Wallis, who won the decider by 3secs., a near thing.—A. Tamlin, Sec.

Questions and Answers.

COURTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS

For Rules see Last Week's Issue.

The following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must, of course, be sent to the Editor.

Canaries, Claude St. John, British Birds, Males, and Hybrids H. Norman, Foreign Birds—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Wild Bird Life H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc., of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Borders, Scotch, or any other variety of Canary, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his questions for answer to some leading specialist on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

EYE TROUBLE IN YORKSHIRE. (J. H. F.).—Glad to learn the eye is better, and, as the trouble does not appear to be cataract, I have no doubt the lotion, if persevered with, will quite restore the eyesight, but as progress seems to be very slow I think you may do well to try the effect of the following ointment for a fortnight or so, discontinuing the lotion meanwhile, and note effect. Get a chemist to mix for you five grains of yellow oxide of mercury in a quarter ounce of spermaceti, and put a tiny piece of this—about the size of a pin's head—in the eye each evening. Hold the bird for a few moments and assist the ointment to flow around and beneath the eyelids as it melts. Watch the effect, and if improvement is more rapid, continue with it until eye is quite cured; otherwise go back to the lotion at end of fortnight, and persevere with that as long as is necessary.

A PITIFUL NOISE. (Devonian).—You should have described the noise as nearly as you could. Some of the most "pitiful noises" I have heard were perfectly natural notes of the birds making them. Try a diet of plain canary seed only, with a pinch of summer rape on top every second day. Give a teaspoonful of mixed seed once a week, a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar twice a week, and a little green salad of some kind daily. For three days add twelve drops of syrup of buckthorn to the water, and afterwards 20 drops of whisky, and five each of tincture of lobelia, apocuanha wine and glycerine every second day for a fortnight. See that it is not allowed to hang near or over burning lights in the evenings, nor exposed to direct cold draughts or extremes of heat and cold.

FEET AND SEED (Amadis).—(1) The bird has relaxed hind toes, and the following treatment will doubtless set matters right. But you should first of all see that the perches are made of a nice soft wood, and of a proper size for the bird to grip comfortably, and securely fixed in the cage. Place two saucers side by side, fill one with quite cold water and the other with water as hot as you can comfortably bear your little finger in some little time. Catch the bird and hold the feet immersed in the hot water for a minute or two; then remove them and at once place them in the cold water for a similar period; then back into the hot for another similar period; and so on until they have been in both waters five or six times, being careful to finish up in the cold water. Then dry them and gently rub on them a little of any stimulating embrocation, such as Elliman's. Repeat this once a day for a few days until you see that the bird begins to grip with them.

(2) The cause of the perpetual moulting is either exposure to cold draughts, rapid extremes of heat and cold, or damp. Remove any or all of these exciting causes, keep the bird under healthful conditions, and it will doubtless be free from this trouble when it has moulted in the ordinary way, which it will doubtless do very soon. (3) The sample of seed you sent appears to be quite all right, and is of very fair quality all round, but a mixture of this kind is only suitable for occasional use as a treat, and not as a staple diet. At the same time giving this seed mixture for a few days is not sufficient to account for the death of the bird in the way you describe. Whether the seed was contaminated with any injurious substance only an analysis could determine. A post-mortem on the bird would have revealed the cause of death, which no amount of speculation could do satisfactorily.

SWELLING ON ABDOMEN. (E. V.).—It is not possible to be dogmatic about the cause of the swelling without seeing it, though I am inclined to think it is due to some ovarian trouble, probably some abnormality in the production of the eggs. If a valuable bird it would be the wisest course to ask a veterinary surgeon to look at it and advise you. Put it on a diet of bread and milk, to which you should add three drops of cod liver oil emulsion each day, and sprinkle the whole freely with maw seed. Offer a little scalded summer rape daily, and also a morsel of banana, and let this suffice for the diet until the acute symptoms have passed away. Then you may give access to a supply of plain canary seed, but continue the above items for a week or two afterwards. In each two tablespoonfuls of drinking-water add twelve drops of syrup of buckthorn for one day only, and after this give instead thirty drops of brandy in the same quantity of water each day until better. Warmth, stimulation, and a light, easily digested diet are the only things likely to be of any service in such a case as this.

HEN GETTING BARE. (Mrs. P. D. Alair).—See that the cage is thoroughly cleared from insects in the first place, and keep bird in a fairly warm temperature, but do not over-heat it, and do not expose it to direct cold draughts, rapid extremes of heat and cold, or damp, and do not hang it near or over burning lights in the evenings. Allow bird to bathe as freely as it desires, and touch the joints of the door, ends of perches, and any joints or cracks about the cage with a small brush dipped in a strong solution of quassia twice a week for a time, but there should be no necessity for continuing with the quassia baths. Give a diet of plain canary seed as staple, and in addition give separately half a teaspoonful of summer rape and a morsel of banana every second day, and on the alternate days a morsel of bread and milk, lightly dusted with flour of sulphur, and finally sprinkled with soft sugar, and also a little green salad of some kind. Twice a week you may give a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, maw, and broken groats. On each of the days following those on which you give the bread and milk add to the drinking-water about five grains of chlorate of potash and ten drops of lemon juice. Continue this treatment for a month. Do not pat anything at all on the skin unless the grease you have used appears to have made the skin sore, in which case you may anoint it slightly twice a week during the month with sulphur ointment, but do not daub the plumage unnecessarily.

TO REAR AND TAME A CANARY. (E. Richards).—For detailed particulars about hand-rearing young Canaries see reply to "Mrs. Basil Higgins" in our last issue. If you take the young you wish to rear from the parents when about twelve days old you should have no difficulty in rearing it safely, and by being kept away from its parents it will grow up naturally tame and fearless. There is practically no secret whatever in taming them when they are brought up by hand apart from the parents, beyond constant attention, a quiet manner, and frequently giving them little tit-bits of food or green salad, seeds, etc., from the hand as soon as they show signs of beginning to try to feed themselves. Offer all such dainties from the fingers, and give free access only to the staple diet of plain canary seed; cultivate a quiet methodical manner, and avoid sudden movements or noises when attending to them, or too frequent attempts at handling them. You will find that as they leave the nest and grow up they will rapidly acquire all the familiarity of habit with you that you could wish, but they will show some resentment to being taken in the hand, and it is best to encourage all their advances, but avoid frequent handling at first. They will gradually lose their natural resentment, and grow not to mind being taken in the hand, and soon show much greater fearlessness than if you attempted to force your caresses upon them prematurely. Be patient, kind, gentle, and attentive, and you will find that nothing else is required to make the bird as chummy as any you may have seen.

YOUNG YORKSHIRE MOPY. (A. R. Daniels).—Most birds have their dull and listless moods more or less when they are moulting, and I do not suspect there is anything else wrong with your bird, beyond the natural effect of the moult. But you should not hang it quite near a window, as, even if it is not exposed to cold draughts, it is practically certain to be exposed to great fluctuations of temperature, which are quite as bad. Keep it in a bright and healthy place where the temperature is fairly equal, though it need not be very warm, neither should it be quite cold. A moderate warmth will expedite the moulting process, and thus help the bird. Give a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar every second day for a fortnight or so, and on the alternate days add to the water 20 drops of whisky, and five of syrup or saffron during the first week and afterwards substitute 20 drop doses of Chemical Food two or three times a week for a month. Instead of watercress give a half-ripe plantain stalk each day whilst moulting. I do not think anything else will be necessary, but if the bird shows no signs of improvement in two or three weeks write again, and repeat particulars, and I will advise you further.

WILL NOT SING, ETC. (E. Lockhart).—(1) I think if you have a little patience the bird will resume song all right when it is quite recovered from its late condition. It is not of any import that it remains silent for perhaps a few weeks at this time. Certainly I would not advise you to invest in toy instruments to try to incite it to sing. If you could place it where it would hear a good free singer for a week or two that might be of some practical use, and help to bring it out a little sooner than it would otherwise begin, but trying to bring it out by making unholy noises, or with toy instruments is quite useless. (2) See that its perches are made of a nice soft wood, of a proper size, and well fitting. Then bathe its inflamed foot in a warm solution of extract of wych hazel—a teaspoonful of the extract in a saucerful of warm water. After bathing for a few minutes dry gently, and if there appears any soreness anoint the foot all over with Lanocyllin ointment. Do not leave any surplus grease about the foot to collect sand and dirt from the cage floor. Repeat bathing once daily for a few days as may seem necessary.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

BIRDS DYING (W. C. Coombs).—I am afraid your interference with the oil gland situated on the rump of your birds, did harm rather than good. This gland becomes at times somewhat swollen in some birds, but it should be looked upon as a symptom of some more serious trouble. In your case the swelling and discoloration of the abdomen indicates internal trouble, possible inflammation, and if you have any more birds affected in a like manner, put them on a diet of bread soaked in hot milk; take all their seed away and give a pinch of maw seed only, feed them in this way for two or three days, then give a little soaked seed and gradually get them back on to their usual diet. In bad cases, paint lightly the affected part with Elliman's embrocation, diluted with the same quantity of salad oil, it is too strong to use as it is on a delicate bird. The fact of your having several birds affected is a proof that there is something quite wrong in your management. You say you are feeding them according to our Nutshell booklets, but although these excellent publications give general direction for treatment, one has to use a certain amount of discretion, someone I recently visited had a cage stuffed with groundsel, some of it hanging in the water tin, and some in a decayed condition, he explained that the Nutshell had told him to give groundsel. Now perhaps if you look round your birds and carefully consider your method of feeding them you may be able to see where you are in error. See that all seed is in sound condition, and quite free from dust, give seedling green food in small quantities, and fresh daily, let all the drinking water be boiled before giving it to the birds.

SHOW CAGE FOR HAWFINCH (F. G.).—A useful show cage would be 14 inches long, 12 inches high, and 6 inches deep, the colour should be a fairly dark, but rich green. If you are painting the cage yourself get a laurel leaf and imitate the colour as nearly as you can. Do not take one of the fresh ones of recent growth as these are a shade too yellow, find a nice even coloured one. The same colour will do admirably for a Bullfinch, although I prefer to have it just a shade richer, as this forms a greater contrast to the red breast of the Bullie, and also shows up the darker markings.

EXHIBITING GOLDFINCH-CANARY (Derby Lad).—Dark Goldfinch-Canaries frequently show a light patch on the lower part of the body. If the dark feathers finish off abruptly, and the light feathers are white, the bird is a variegated. In some the dark feathers flow into the lighter ones almost imperceptibly, and these light feathers are not white but incline to yellow or cream; such birds are frequently exhibited in the dark class. By your description I should think your bird would be eligible in the dark class, but the unfortunate part about it is, that some judges will accept a bird that others will disqualify. (2) I would advise you to colour feed him. Non fed Hybrids do not as a rule stand much chance of getting to the top of the class, and the feeding, if done properly, may darken the light feathers you mention. (3) He should by now be dropping into moult, if not, try a fly in a large flight or aviary; this change from a small cage usually has the desired effect.

SEXING GOLDFINCH MULES (C. Smith).—You do not say if your Hybrids are adult or young birds. If they are this year's produce I am afraid I cannot give you any information that would assist you to decide with any certainty the sex of your light and dark bird. If you had a whole brood of them the size and richer colour would help you to pick out the cocks, but where you have none to compare it makes it somewhat difficult, although an expert could probably make a correct guess. If your birds are adult and have consequently attained their full plumage, the light one, if a cock bird, should show some trace of blaze on the face, and rich colour on the wings. The hens, as a rule, are very pale throughout, and quiet in manner compared with cocks. In dark birds the cock's blaze is generally rich in tone, although perhaps not very expansive, BRITISH BIRD & HYBRID QUERISTS should consult Houlton's great work, "Cage-Bird Hybrids" (7/6); Norman's "British Bird Manual" (2/3); or Part 1 "Hardbills" (1/1), Part 2 "Softbills" (1/1); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants" (1/2); "Secrets of Hybrid Breeding" (1/2); Dr. Cresswell's "Hygiene of Bird-keeping" (1/1); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); "Colour-feeding" (3d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each); No. 1 "Goldfinch," No. 2 "Linnets," No. 3 "Sparrows," No. 4 "Song Thrush and Blackbird," No. 11 "Bullfinch," No. 13 "Chaffinch," No. 15 "Greenfinch," No. 22 "Siskin, Redpoll, and Tit," No. 25 "Small Insectivorous Birds," No. 26 "Large Insectivorous Birds," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Care Them," No. 9 "Disinfection of Cages, Birdrooms, etc.," No. 12 "How to Mould British Birds." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

and there is a nice bar of yellow on the edge of the wing feathers, while cocks are brighter in colour throughout than hens. The blaze of a hen is usually inclined to be of an orange or yellowish tone, the wing bars are faint and narrow, and the colours throughout dull and wanting in tone. The cocks are grand singers and this alone should show their sex. If you are in doubt you had better keep them until after the moult, when, if cocks, they would soon commence to sing if well fed.

GREENFINCH AILING (R. S.).—It does not appear that there is much the matter with your Greenfinch; the moult affects birds in different ways, and I expect yours is feeling the strain. I would advise you to give him boiled water to drink, putting a small teaspoonful of chemical food in it twice a week. Discontinue the linseed and give a good pinch of maw seed daily. Do not be too liberal with green food, select the seedling tops, rather than the green leaves of the wild food you collect. (2) The birds you lost were probably sickening for the moult, and as they are very susceptible to cold at that time it may have carried them off; a little stimulant given in time might have saved them, the bath can be given right through the moult, but must be used on suitable days only, and then in the morning so that the birds dry quickly, and are quite fit before roosting time. The bath greatly assists birds to throw off the old feathers, and encourages the growth of new ones. Birds will bathe almost as freely in cold water as in warm, and come to no harm providing they do it fairly early in the morning.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

BUDGERIGARS (X. Y. Z.).—I am afraid the case is nearly hopeless, but as you have had it some time you will doubtless like to try to effect a cure. Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water daily till the bowels have been well moved; when this occurs only give the magnesia once a week, and on other days put half a teaspoonful of syrup of phosphates in the water. If you can handle the bird without unduly scaring it, give it two drops of cod liver oil direct to the beak daily till it is in condition again. Anoint the bare parts lightly with sulphur ointment, but do not use sufficient to make the plumage greasy. Give the bird as much seedling and flowering grass as it will eat, also grit, cuttlebone, and the usual seeds (canary, white millet, and a millet spray). If you have gas in your cellar kitchen the bird must hang below the level of the gaslights.

MARKING BUDGERIGARS (T. F. Sami).—This should have been done while they were nestlings, when they should have been rung, just the same as Canary breeders do. However, if you procure some aluminium rings which pull open, and press these round the leg, it can be done now. By procuring a number of different coloured rings you could distinguish the young of respective pairs and early and late broods. Most breeders leave the sexes together during the winter, especially when they are in roomy outdoor aviaries; however, if you have the convenience, catch the birds up and keep the sexes separate. This prevents attempts at breeding during the winter months, and enables you to regulate the season, so that very prolific pairs do not exhaust themselves with too many broods. Yellows and greens can be kept together, but the yellows and greens interbreed, with the result that the bulk of the progeny are greens, but such yellows as keep separate will throw good stock, though if you let them go on commingling, the yellows would be ultimately lost, or what remained be so marked and tinged with green as to be worthless. You should get the Nutshell "Budgerigars," 2½d. post free, from our manager.

AILING GREY (E. C. M.).—Continue to give the cod liver oil emulsion daily, and put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia into the drinking water daily till the bowels have been well moved; then once a week will be often enough to give the magnesia. Get the following mixture from your chemist: Ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills, and glycerine in equal parts—take one teaspoonful of the mixture, put it in a bottle and add six teaspoonfuls of water—give the bird three drops of this twice daily till the breathing is easier. Examine its mouth, and if this is at all unclean or slimy, put a little honey and borax in the mouth once or twice a day, smearing on the tongue from a short piece of stick, but so long as you get it inside the beak the bird will absorb it. Keep the cage standing in a warm situation, yet where the air is fresh, but there must be no draught, and it will help if the temperature is rather high. If unfavourable symptoms develop, write again at once with full details.

BUDGERIGARS (Ruth).—You should send to our manager for the Nutshell "Budgerigars," 2½d. post free; it will tell you more than can be crowded into this reply. There has been a series, "Keeping Foreign Seed-eaters in Cages," from my pen in recent issues of CAGE BIRDS; if you are a new reader the Editor would send you the parts containing them. If you handle Budgerigars they bite, and their beaks have needle points, so that they usually draw blood—but it is not serious, little more than a pin prick. They must be fed on canary and white millet seed; give them a millet spray occasionally, and keep cage bottom covered with sand and grit. Also green-food, especially seeding and flowering grass while in season. The minimum size for the cage should be 24 by 18 by 12 to 15 inches high. They are hardy birds, and if you have a spare room, and could give them a large box with a wire-netting front, they would be more interesting; in any case use natural twiggy branches for perches.

WHAT IS IT? (W. B. C.).—It is an Orange-checked Waxbill; it is a seed-eater. Diet: Canary, white and Indian millet seed, millet sprays, green-food, grit, cuttlebone, and water. The Nutshell "Waxbills" would tell you all about it. The Pekin Robin is as large as, and very like, our Robin, except in coloration, as you'll see from the figure on book cover.

PLANTS FOR AVIARY (Psittacus).—It is practically no use planting trees and bushes in an aviary containing Parakeets and Love-should consult Page's "Foreign Birds for Beginners" (1/1); Arthur's "Budgerigars and Cockatiels" (6d.); Arthur's "Parrots for Pleasure and Profit" (7d.); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods and Wild Plants" (1/2); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); Dr. Cresswell's "Hygiene of Bird-keeping" (1/1); "Colour-feeding" (3d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each); No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Care Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 14 "Godian Finches," No. 16 "Aradovots," No. 17 "The Grey Parrot," No. 18 "Budgerigars," No. 19 "The Pekin Robin," No. 20 "Waxbills." birds; the kinds most likely to resist their ravages longest are common broad-leaved laurel and rhododendron. You can, however, make a Parakeet aviary look very nice by planting firmly dead trees and bushes, and covering the ground area with grass, herbage, and cereals; as a rule, such flourish and are very effective. I should say the hen Cockatiel is either moulting or her mate is plucking her a little, more probably the former.

WHAT ARE THEY? (M. E. W.).—Madagascar or Grey-headed Lovebirds, the all-green bird is the hen. Give them a bath. Canary white millet, a millet spray, green-food (seeding and flowering grass as long as it is obtainable), grit, cuttlebone, and water, will meet their simple requirements. The mixture does not contain enough canary seed; mix your own, the canary and white millet to be in equal parts. Give them a large husk or small barrel for a nest receptacle, and they will require a few thin twigs, strips of bark and leaves as nesting material. They will want a large cage if they are to breed.

WHAT IS IT? (C. Emmett).—An Amazon, very probably a young bird; it is rather difficult to name from written descriptions, and I really can't make your description exactly fit any of them. If, as I suspect, it is a young bird, then some of the missing colour may develop later and solve the difficulty. I am keeping your description by me, and the first time I am in London I will look through the skins at the Museum, and possibly among some of the immature specimens I shall find one to fit yours.

POST MORTEM.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

G. GREENOP.—Death occurred from exhaustion following internal hemorrhage resulting from injury.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

FRED SMITH.—The plant sent is one of the Stellaria (doubtless the Lesser Stitchwort), to which group the Chickweed belongs. Its seeds would not be harmful to either Canaries or British and Foreign seed-eating birds.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers in all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

- RULES.
- 1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.
 - 2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.
 - 3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.
 - 4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the trans-

- action will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.
- 5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.
 - 6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.
 - 7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.
 - 8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.
 - 9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.
 - 10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.
HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

Buyers, Please Note

Despite the heavy advances in the price of raw materials, I am determined not to raise the prices of goods until my present extensive stock is exhausted. Absolutely everything required by catchers in stock, and all guaranteed brand new goods; send stamp for full printed list, which also gives hints on net making. Practically every professional catcher in the Kingdom uses my articles, and I guarantee every purchaser fullest satisfaction or return his money in full. During the term of the war many people will probably have spare time; to what better use can they put it than to have some real good sport in bird catching, and at same time augment their income by disposing of their surplus catches, but to insure this they must have serviceable articles made by a man who thoroughly understands what is required for successful catching. Every article sent out by me is guaranteed to have been properly tested and exactly same quality as supplied to my own catchers. (1740)

F. CAPERN Bird Food Manufacturer Bristol

SOFTBILL keepers, take expert advice before proceeding to buy and keep the larger species of insectivorous birds. You will then have no trouble in keeping your pets in the best of health. This advice is offered in "Nutshell No. 26," by H. J. Fulljames. It is a wonderful little work, dealing with most varieties in a highly interesting and instructive manner. Foods and their preparation, and the various styles of cages also receive full attention. Can you breed Mealworms? This booklet tells you how. Post free, 2 1/2d. from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Look at our list of agents; call on the nearest and get it for 2d.

HAVE YOU NOTICED

that I have not previously advertised British Birds this season? My reason for this is that, although I have had a large stock for some considerable time, I would not place them upon the market until all birds were thoroughly on hard seed. I now offer a splendid lot of genuine Worcestershire cock Goldfinches, all in pink of health and condition, at 1/6 each, three 4/-, six 7/-; specially selected larger cocks, for moulting for show, and warranted in free song, 2/- each, three 5/-; two-year-old cock Goldfinch, 2/6; hen Goldfinches, 1/- each, three 2/6, six 4/-; splendid lot cock brown Linnets, in superb condition, 8d. each, three 1/6, six 2/6, twelve 4/-; special picked cocks, for show, muling or contest singing, and now in song, 1/- each, three 2/6, six 4/-; handsome lot of young cock Skylarks, 1/- each, three 2/-; cock Greenfinches, 6d. each, three 1/-; six 1/6; travelling cages, 3d. per 3 birds extra. Kindly note all birds are warranted properly netted in county of Worcester, by catchers employed solely by myself, are guaranteed feeding freely, and well on usual seed mixture, before sent out, and are sent on approval on distinct understanding that unless every satisfaction is given, birds have only to be returned and the whole of your money is promptly returned. For past 23 years I have been a continuous advertiser, and have never done business on any other terms than these.

THERE is no more lovely seed-eater than the popular Gouldian Finch, which, however, is very difficult to establish. This trouble can be overcome, and the variety kept successfully. But you must follow the hints given in "Nutshell No. 14," from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C., post free for 23d. From agents (see list frequently published).

THOUGH they can often be purchased for the modest half-crown, Pekin Nightingales are very beautiful in plumage. Have a fine song, and make ideal cage or aviary birds. Some very helpful information on this variety will be found in "Nutshell No. 19," the author of which is Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Get it at once, 23d. post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from our agents (not published frequently).

WAXBILLS (Golden-breasted, Orange-checked, Grey, and St. Helena). Than this interesting quartette, which can be purchased 25 from 2/6 to 7/6 a pair, there are few more charming foreigners. They can be successfully kept, too, with little difficulty if you will follow the hints given by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. in "Nutshell No. 20," 23d. post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Call at any of our agents and get it for 2d. (list frequently published).

Twitterings.

Mr. A. Green, honorary secretary, writes that the annual show of the Coventry O.S. will be held on Nov. 14. Mr. T. E. Barker, sec. of Todmorden C.B.S., has removed from 15, Watty Terrace to "Oakdene," Walsden, nr. Todmorden. We are informed by the General Secretary that the show of the Vale of Conway Agricultural Society is postponed until next year. We hear from Mr. C. Davison, Sec. South Moor C.B.S., that there will be forty-one classes at the annual show, including a Novice class in each Canary section. I am sorry to inform you, writes Mr. A. T. Bellinger, hon. sec. Bromley and W. Kent F.A., that owing to Government requiring the Drill Hall we shall be unable to hold our annual show on Oct. 14 and 15 as arranged. We are sorry to hear from Mr. A. Beavington, of Isleworth, that after eleven months of illness he is compelled to go into hospital for the second time, and must therefore dispose of the whole of his birds and appliances. These will be found advertised in one lot under "Norwich."

We have received notification from the respective secretaries that the following societies have decided not to hold an open show this year: Middlesbro' and Tees-side C.B.S., Dy-sart C.B.S., Wakefield Roller C.C., and Wimbledon C.B.S. The young stock show of the Islington F.A., fixed for Sept. 26, is also cancelled. Wimbledon C.B.S. will hold a members' show early in the new year to decide the destination of the cups. In "Bird Notes," the journal of the Foreign Bird Club, for August, Mr. Wesley T. Page continues his account of "An Easter Tour," the Marquis of Tavistock contributes an interesting story of his Bankian Cockatoos, and the Rev. J. M. Paterson, M.A., tells of the breeding of Hooded Siskins, and a cross between an English and a Himalayan Goldfinch. Among the other contributors are Mr. W. Shore Baily, Major Perreau, Mr. S. Williams, Mr. J. Goodchild, Capt. J. S. Reeve, Mrs. E. S. Gardiner, and the Hon. Mary Hawke.

Watford's Sensible Attitude.

Watford C.B.S. held a special meeting on Monday last, writes a correspondent, to consider a recommendation by the Show Committee, "That the open show, in view of the crisis, be abandoned." After considerable discussion the members decided to adjourn for a week to see if there was any chance of holding the show, as they were somewhat reluctant to adopt the abandonment too hastily. Why not Sparrows as Food? Considering the enormous amount of damage done to the corn at this time of the year by Sparrows, would this not be a good time to make a determined effort to lessen their numbers? It is only prejudice that prevents Sparrows from being used as food. Why should not a start be made now when meat is becoming so costly to the poor?—A. Shield, in "The Standard."

A Plague of Parrots.

Society is suffering just now from a plague of Parrots, says a writer in the "Manchester Dispatch." If you take your walks about the squares of Mayfair and Belgravia you will be startled by horrible shrieks and screams emanating from my lady's Parrot, and the creatures may be seen at every other house, either caged in the windows or perched on the railings in front. One goes to tea and finds one's hostess has only two preoccupations, and nothing short of a megaphone is of any use for conversation. Yapping round your legs is her toy pom or her Pekingese. Immediately behind your back is the Parrot, who screams insulting remarks just as you have balanced your teacup at the right angle. If you kick the dog you have committed social suicide; if you fail to join the admiring chorus round the Parrot and to accept with proper meekness a finger viciously pecked you are regarded as an outsider, and will probably be "cut" in the park. A man I met to-day was talking of starting an Anti-Parrot League, and I was able to assure him that members, including the husbands of some of the owners, would pour in.

Scaring the Wood-pigeons.

Wood Pigeons are most difficult to scare away from a field to which they have once taken unless one is prepared to allow someone to be in the field all day. The Wood-Pigeon takes very little notice of anything that he cannot see, but I would suggest that you try an automatic gun, an affair worked by clockwork, that fires off blank cartridges at regular intervals. Any implement agent should be able to obtain one for you, and this, coupled with a fairly realistic scarecrow, should keep them away.—W. M. T. in the "Fancier and Stockbreeder."

The Augury of the Storks.

The ancients were devout watchers of the movements of migratory birds, and the Roman "augurs" were nothing more than official bird-watchers, basing their forecasts on ornithological observations. Without doubt there was much of quackery in their business, but probably also a strain of real wisdom—in the early days of the profession, at least. A hundred and two years ago a forecast of uncommon importance was made, and neglected. The Storks that autumn were noticed to leave Europe long before the usual date, and this was accepted by the natives of Russia as a certain sign of a severe winter. The attention of Napoleon was drawn to the fact, but he laughed at it; the campaign against Russia was opened; and, as we know, it was the unprecedented severity of the year that broke his army and contributed towards his fall.

Starving Sea Birds.

The war in Europe has not been without its effect upon bird life, and in the North Sea, a friend writes me, says "W.C." in the "Manchester Dispatch," some remarkable sights are to be seen around the fishing boats operating within sight of land. The withdrawal of the trawlers from the Dogger Bank has meant that thousands of sea birds are starving, for they have practically existed upon the offal cast back into the sea by the fishermen.

Now the food supply is stopped, and thousands of Gulls are starving, whilst huge flocks of the birds have flown towards land and in the far north they are inland scouring the newly-ploughed hillsides for an existence. I believe the birds have not appeared on the coasts in great numbers for many years. The small rocks at low tide now seem to be swarming with desolate-looking birds, and the capture of a snail fish or some garbage is the signal for a general battle for possession.

BUSINESS IN PLENTY CAN STILL BE DONE.

"Please thank, through CAGE BIRDS, those who sent for Finches, as I am sold out. I have had 50 letters beside 12 postcards for a sixpenny advertisement."—J. KING (Grantham).

"I must thank CAGE BIRDS for the wonderful success I got from my advt. I got 30 enquiries for my Hawfinch, and had to part with two more birds I was going to keep for myself. Now I shall have to get more birds. I wish CAGE BIRDS every success."—BERNARD ROBINSON (Redditch).

PRIZES FOR NEW VARIETIES

And the Breeding of British and Foreign Birds.

To encourage all readers to try what they can do in the matter of evolving new varieties of the Canary, of producing new kinds of Mules and Hybrids, and breaking fresh ground in the breeding of British and Foreign birds in cages and aviaries, CAGE BIRDS is adopting the scheme outlined below, which we hope will commend itself to, and stimulate into action, every bird-keeper who can possibly join in it.

CAGE BIRDS suitable and valuable mementoes are offered to any breeder who succeeds in

- (1) Producing and rearing any new variety of Canary, bred in either cage or aviary.
(2) Producing and rearing any new variety of Mule or Hybrid, bred in either cage or aviary.
(3) Breeding and rearing in a cage any species of British or Foreign bird which has not previously been so bred.
(4) Breeding and rearing in an aviary any species of British or Foreign bird which has not previously been so bred.

The mementoes we offer take two forms: (1) A large suitably-inscribed silver medal in case.

(2) A hand-coloured certificate, suitable for framing. The choice will rest with the successful breeder.

An additional prize of £1 1s. Cash will be given to the breeder of the Rarest British Softbill in a Cage.

This is presented by Mrs. E. Warren Vernon.

SINGING CANARIES FOR SOLDIERS' HOSPITALS.

It has occurred to us that many of the temporary hospitals and convalescent homes now being brought into being for wounded soldiers might be glad to have for the benefit of inmates and nurses a singing Canary. We therefore invite each of our readers who keep Canaries to set apart from their stock one singing cock Canary in a small travelling cage. We do not require these birds to be sent in to us. All we ask is that the following promise should be given.

Canaries for the Hospitals

I am willing, if called on any time during the next twelve months, to supply free of cost one singing cock Canary and small travelling cage, to be presented as a gift to any Hospital or Convalescent Home applying for same.

Name.....
Address (in full)
Date.....
To the Editor, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London.

When we have received the necessary number of promises, we will then ascertain how many hospitals and homes for wounded soldiers require these gifts, and we will deal with all applications and gifts in the order in which they are received. All promises will be acknowledged in the columns of CAGE BIRDS, and the ultimate destination of each bird will also be announced as soon as possible.

Readers who cannot make any definite promise at the present moment may mark their promise "if possible."

We should like to make it clear that we are not asking for Canaries which are up to exhibition standard; all that is needed is that they shall be healthy, good songsters, and not too old (the sex, of course, readers will be careful to guarantee).

Cash Prizes for the Best Written Accounts.

In addition we shall award to each sender of the best written essay in each of Sections 1, 2, and 4,

A Cash Prize of £1 1s.

that is, three guineas in all. In Section 3 the sender of the best written essay will receive presented by Mr. W. E. Teschemaker. Rule 6, of course, applies also to the awarding of all essay prizes, to compete for which the essays must be of not less than 1,000 words in length. In fact the explicitness and helpfulness of the details given will be the chief features taken into consideration when making the awards.

A Cash Prize of £2 2s.

The Governing Conditions.

- (1) Claims for CAGE BIRDS Breeders' Prizes must be lodged with Editor within ten days of the young birds being hatched; and an independent witness skilled with birds shall certify to having seen the young in the nest or with the parents.
(2) All young, excepting only Canaries and Mules and Hybrids, must be entirely reared by their own parents, hand-rearing not being permissible.
(3) To qualify for CAGE BIRDS Breeders' Prizes the young of Hardbills and Softbills must live for at least three weeks after leaving the nest, young Quails six weeks, and the young Canaries or young Mules or Hybrids until after their first moult. By "young" is meant one, or more.
(4) Our definition of a cage is: A cage to come within the scope of Section 3 must be one that can be easily moved, without being taken to pieces, from place to place by one person.
(5) Written accounts of the breeding, for publication in CAGE BIRDS, must be lodged with us within four weeks (28 days) from the date the young birds leave the nest.
(6) The decision of the Editor of CAGE BIRDS will be final and binding in every case and he shall have the right to call together a committee of expert bird-keepers if need be to assist him in coming to the said decision.

SHOWS.

ADVERTISEMENTS. SCALE OF CHARGES, which must be fully PREPAID 1/4-inch 2/6, 1/2-inch 3/6, 1 inch 6/6. Except to "Guaranteed" Shows appearing in our "Dates Fixed" Column, which are charged at 5s. per inch and pro rata. SHOW ADVERTISEMENTS across two or more columns 7/6 per inch, column width, except to "Guaranteed" Shows, for which the charge is 6/6 per inch, column width. A reduction will be made for a series of not less than Nine Weeks. Secretaries desirous of "guaranteeing" a Show should apply for guarantee form to our Manager. CAGE BIRDS, 154, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

Merionethshire Agricultural Society, TOWYN, Friday, Sept. 4th, 1914. Judge, Mr. Clem Watson, Oxhey, Watford. Cage Birds (open); Poultry, Pigeons (open to Wales). Prize money, 10/-, 5/-. Entries finally close Aug. 26th. Schedules and entry forms from—Robt. Roberts, Secretary.

To Correspondents generally. It would much facilitate our work if Secretaries and others would kindly write out their club reports, notices, etc., in the style in which they see them printed. Write on ONE SIDE ONLY of each sheet of paper used. Will all correspondents, and secretaries and officials of societies in particular, please note that CAGE BIRDS now goes to press on Wednesday afternoon, so that all matter for publication in our issue of the same week MUST reach us on TUESDAY TO BE CERTAIN OF INCLUSION.

THE PATRONAGE OF SPECIALIST CLUBS.

Societies desiring the patronage of the following clubs should apply to the respective sees., stating date of show, number of classes and judges: Northern Border and S.F.C.C., M. C. [Will sees. kindly let us know when their patronage list is full for the forthcoming season.—(Editor).]

All About the Bullfinch: Its Keeping, Moulting and Exhibiting.

By ERNEST A. BUSH (Worthing).

THE Bullfinch, one of the most beautiful of our British Finches, is a prime favourite with a good many bird-keepers. As a wild bird his food consists chiefly of the following: Privet and blackberries, buds of the plum tree and gooseberry and currant bushes, also the following wild seeds, dandelion, groundsel, shepherd's purse, dock, ragweed, various thistles, and the seeds of the ash tree, known as "ash keys."

There is no difficulty at all in distinguishing the sexes, for the hen lacks the beautiful crimson breast of the cock bird. The Bullfinch nests in the month of May, and the site chosen is often the middle of a thick blackberry bush, where they are safe from intrusion. The nest is composed of fine twigs, roots and hair. The hen does all the building. The eggs are usually four or five in number, and are of a greenish-blue colour, with purplish-brown markings. They take fourteen days to hatch out, and the young Bullfinches before they are feathered are very ugly, looking nearly all head! They are ready to leave the nest at three weeks old. Until the first moult there is hardly any difference between the sexes.

Hand-Rearing Easy.

Bullfinches are fairly easy birds to hand-rear, and can be reared on ordinary egg food (as is given to Canaries); after a few days add a little soaked rape, and give them as many of the small wild seeds as you can obtain. The hand-rearing of Bullfinches however, is hardly necessary, as they are the easiest of our British Finches to steady. Fresh-caught birds, with careful handling, will soon lose their wildness, and get tame.

As to the catching of the Bullfinch, that is no hard matter, for they are one of the easiest of birds to trap. All you need is a double trap-cage, with a Bullie in the bottom compartment, and a few black or privet berries (failing these, a handful of hemp and sunflower seeds will be sufficient). Leave the trap cage on the top of a hedge, and if there are any Bullies within call, they will answer your bird and come to see who the intruder is. When they see the bait, they will usually hop down inside. Be careful to see that the berries in the trap are placed right down, as the Bullie is a very artful bird, and won't jump down if he can reach it by craning his neck. They should never be caught in the spring, as they are setting up housekeeping then.

Feed fresh caught birds on soaked seed, also all the suitable wild seeds you can find. I always put them into a small outdoor aviary when first caught, as they are not so likely to damage their feathers then as in a cage.

An Apt Scholar.

The Bullfinch is not much of a song-bird, though some will pipe very sweet and low, but is very intelligent, and some bird-keepers take advantage of this by teaching them to pipe tunes. Young hand-reared birds are best for this purpose. The tune which you want them to acquire must be whistled over to them every time before feeding. When they begin to whistle a few notes they should be encouraged, and the best way to do this is to give them a few "tit-bits." With perseverance they can be taught several tunes; but let them learn one thoroughly before starting on another. The whistling should be kept up for several months. Be careful not to stop it in the moulting season, as this invariably leads to their forgetting what they have already learnt.

The Bullfinch begins to moult about the end of July. The best way to moult them is to put them in an outdoor aviary, for they then get plenty of exercise and fresh air. But where a bird lover has not the advantage of an outdoor aviary, the next best thing is a large, roomy cage, which should be hung outdoors on every available opportunity. But never put them in the direct rays of the sun, as this helps to "kill" the colour. I never advise the moulting of a Bullfinch indoors, as I think they come out very much duller in colour. The birds should have plenty of black and privet berries, as these are Nature's own colouring agents; also give them as many wild seeds as can be found. Artificial colour food does not seem to do them much good; the wild berries are ten times better for them, but when I say give them berries, I don't mean one or two sprigs a day, but as many as the bird will eat. Privet berries are very useful, as they will last quite a long while, if put in a glass of water, or stuck into damp earth. When the birds are moulted, it is a good plan to catch them and cage them for a few weeks, to give them the opportunity to steady down.

The Points of an Exhibition Bird.

For exhibition purposes a Bullfinch should be a shapely, thick-set bird, short and cobby, with a bold, well-filled breast, broad skull, and broad shoulders, neck and throat full, short, and well filled in, close fitting wing, nice easy carriage, cap clean cut and glossy, breast rich and bright in colour, the crimson running right down to the thighs. The back should be of a silvery grey colour, while the light wing bar should be showing prominently, likewise the white rump feathers. The tail must be neatly folded, and legs and feet clean and free from scales. The main point to consider is perhaps colour. It is not much good showing a bird failing in this respect.

A bath should be given at least once a day, as the Bullfinch is very fond of bathing. This is all that is needed in the way of "getting-up" a Bullfinch for show. The best colour for a show cage inside is either a dark holly green, or a pale blue (I prefer the green), while the outside should be enamelled black. Do not exhibit your birds too many times in a season, as repeated long railway journeys very often prove too much for them.

As regard the feeding of the Bullfinch, this is no hard matter. A good stock mixture can be made of the following: Two parts canary, 2 parts teal, 1 part sunflower, 1 part rape, 1 part summer or German rape. Do not give much hemp, except as a "tit-bit." In the moulting season it is as well to stop the hemp altogether. With the above-named mixture, and the berries and wild seeds, clean water and a bath every day, our bird will not go far wrong. The Bullfinch is a splendid bird for a beginner, as it is hardy and healthy, providing it is properly kept.

The hen Bullfinch is now almost as valuable as her mate, as since Hybrid breeding has become the fashion, the lions have been in large request. Strange to say the cock Bullie has never yet been known to father a Hybrid, but doubtless in time he will become a parent of Hybrids. The hen has been crossed with a good many different birds, such as the Canary, Goldfinch, Linnet, Greenfinch, and Redpoll. If any Bullfinches are picked out for Hybrid breeding, do not let them mix with any of their own opposite sex, as an attachment may be formed, and in an instant the hopes of an owner would be dashed to the ground.

The Master Singer of the Canary Tribe

By J. TOMLINSON.

How to keep the Roller Canary in health, to breed for pleasure and profit, and train for exhibition.

TO revert to the training, I said my yearling bird was, if necessary, a preliminary tutor; circumstances compel this, the final is to be given by an old bird now moulting that sings a similar style of song, excepting that where the yearling cock descends on the water roll to a straight toned water roll, the old cock turns it into a water Glucke, then on to a set of flutes. Should these flutes be good the bird will end its song, but on the other hand, if they are delivered high or sharp, the song drops afterwards into a deep-bubbling-water-tour, often given in two ways, to turn and finish with a good set of flutes.

Small Faults Not Fatal.

If the reader wonders why I have described this old bird's song, he will now understand that there is something to be learned from it, because from an exhibitor's point of view the song is of more value when the bird sings its faulty flute notes. During its show career, and under several judges, it has been penalised one point for this fault, and been awarded two, or three, points for the D.B.W.T.; so in either case after the penalty had been deducted the bird had one or two points more to its credit than would have been the case did he not sing the faulty notes. This bird also has a well connected delivery, and usually sings its tours in a regular order, and it goes to prove my contention of a well-connected singer when I say that this bird has only been out of the money prizes once in a show career extending over two years.

Although I do not like faulty tours, there seem extenuating circumstances in some instances that would make it appear to be unwise were we to endeavour to breed or train out a small fault. This method of using a preliminary tutor may appear to be contrary to the usual principles of training, but the fact should not be lost sight of that both birds sing a somewhat similar style of song, and young birds will endeavour to copy the song of the second tutor when the first is removed. Further, the pupils are the offspring of both tutors, and the rudimental song is learned from the yearling. I do not advocate a tutor that sings a different style of song to that bred in the youngsters, neither do I advocate the use of two tutors conjointly that have different styles of song, for this would have the tendency to set up a confusion of ideas; one youngster might follow the song of one tutor, another the song of the second tutor, while again others probably would flounder between the two.

Not Excellent all at Once.

Neither will tuition, however good, make fine singers of some young birds, nor the mating of the stock birds always produce such in the first cross. Some insist on taking the wrong turning, headstrong, voice-strong, and notwithstanding their "blue blood" and good tutor, tend to mar rather than to uphold the reputation of their breeding room. These degenerate singers have sometimes been described as untrained singers; from one point of view they are untrained; they cannot be trained to sing a song of sufficient merit to class them among the trained singers. They will bring one tour too prolonged, another too short, singing a few tours intermingled with call notes, or other ugly interjections, or in a thin toned voice, giving one the impression that the birds are lacking in stamina, will skip from one of the lowest tours to the highest one it is possible for them to bring, prolonging it and completing the song with another faulty tour. Other kinds of "ragtime" deliveries could be indicated, but this will be sufficient to show what a good singer should not do.

The above remark, "Always produce in the first cross," may need a little explanation. In all cases the quality of the youngsters' song will be gradient, the worst I have just explained, others will be of sufficient merit to warrant their use as stock birds, while, again, others may be fit to compete at the shows. Again, cases will crop up in some matings, where the offspring on the whole are not such capable singers as might reasonably be expected; and where tuition has been properly given by a suitable schoolmaster, one explanation remains, the blood of the parents has not "blended," or "hit."

How to Perpetuate the Best.

I would advise that young hens produced from such matings should in the following year be mated to their sire, and should his capabilities as a singer be of sufficient merit he should be used as a tutor for the young cocks produced from these matings. After taking into consideration that inferior specimens will always be cropping up, this preponderance of the cock's blood in the youngsters should enable them to produce the song qualities of their sire.

We proceed with the training by removing the young cocks from the breeding room, in order that they shall not be subjected to the baneful influence of faulty singing stock cocks, or it may be a singing hen. Many of the latter are capable of producing a good tour, or roll, but there are few that do not mar it by singing something objectionable.

Another stage in the training is taken when we place the youngsters under the tuition of a schoolmaster. Many inexperienced fanciers treat the matter of a schoolmaster very lightly, and from the number of applications received for schoolmasters this may be an opportune time to throw some light on the dark path many appear to be travelling. The following is characteristic of these inquiries for a tutor: "Can you supply me with an inexpensive B.R.C.C. ring schoolmaster, one that would be fit to train my young birds?"

An experienced fancier will in a moment notice the defects in this application, others not so well versed in Roller matters would see nothing wrong in it. In the first place expense is gradient, in accordance with the "depth of one's pocket" and individual temperament. It is stipulated that the schoolmaster should bear the B.R.C.C. ring, for the fact that a bird wears this ring is a guarantee that it has been bred at home, and not in Germany, but it adds no value whatever to the birds' qualities as a singer.

The essential part of the application is: "One fit to train my young birds." There are some fanciers who cannot name all the tours their birds sing, but there should be few—in view of the advancement that the Roller is making—that could not name a few of the tours, and describe whether they are given straight, or rising, or falling. The best of tutors cannot put in all that the breeder has left out in the foundation. I do not mean by this that it is essential for the schoolmaster to sing an exact reproduction of the song that is sung by the parents of the young ones, but to obtain the best results it should be at least somewhat similar.

To be more definite, if you use a tutor that sings a hollow glucke, or water glucke, and neither of these tours are bred in or sung by the parents of the youngsters, the chance is remote of the tutor inducing the youngsters to sing these two tours. Difficulties would arise in the rising and falling hollow roll; the rising and falling (hollow bent, now being uncommon) schockel, also the rising, or rising and falling water roll,

HOW TO CHEAPEN THE FOOD BILL.

Hints that may be useful to Bird-keepers during the present War crisis.

By G. E. WESTON.

A CORRESPONDENT writes that the method I detailed last week of using soaked bread as a colour-feeding medium, reminded him of another old and very successful Canary breeder and exhibitor who used "bread and milk pudding" with remarkably good results for rearing and "weaning" his young Canaries. This particular "old hand" put slices of stale bread, thinly spread with butter, into a pie dish, covered them with sweetened milk, then baked the whole until nicely browned on top. The quantities of milk and bread were regulated so that the result was a jellified mass when cold, and pieces of this were served to the birds.

A Very Useful "Pudding."

The above was first tried as a sort of intermediate food for young birds, i.e., from the time they commenced to peck until they could safely be said to be on hard seed. Proving such a great success, it was adopted as the chief food for the hens when breeding, and turned out so thoroughly satisfactory that, to use the words of my correspondent, "There was one more 'no-egger' besides yourself in the world; and I have made a third." The food keeps well (better by far than ordinary bread and milk), the hens feed well, practically without exception, and the young thrive well and grow into splendid birds.

Now, could any breeder wish himself better things? And this goes to prove my words of last week that it is not necessary to use hard-boiled eggs (expensive items to many, and troublesome) to successfully breed Canaries. The butter could be omitted—though I consider its use sound from the dietetic point of view—or "melt butter" (margarine) substituted; condensed milk could replace the new milk, if necessary, and, of course, would not need sweetening; while an egg or two could be beaten up and cooked in the "pudding" by those whose fancy leans that way.

Something for Nothing.

To turn to another side of our hobby, keepers of insectivorous birds can at this time of the year provide live food without the outlay of a penny-piece, thus postponing the mealworm-bill until late autumn, and cutting down expenditure in ants' cocoons (unless, that is, they can gather their own supply of ants' eggs" fresh from the nest). The familiar "blue-bottle" fly helps us to this economy. The modus operandi is as follows:

Select any old lid-less tin or box that is free from holes; a nice size is about 10 to 12 ins. long, by 6 to 9 wide, and 4 to 6 deep. Put at the bottom a 2 to 3 in. layer of dry river sand (or silver sand) or even dry garden mould will do; or bran is cheap, and this is about the best of all. On top of this lay the body of a dead bird—two if you like—or a piece of rough meat.

Thus prepared, place the box in a corner of the garden or yard, or of an out-house, or in any available disused attic or room where it will not be a nuisance and the window can be left open, or on a roof. Other likely spots will no doubt occur to my readers, the point to observe being that the "blue-bottles" must have access to the box. The latter will soon "blow" the carrion, and their eggs develop into squirming and oft-times smelly tit-bits beloved of soft-bills and known as gentles.

Cremation Superseded.

The gentles quickly develop, and in number simply surprising. I recently found a young Blackbird dead in my garden, and the quantity of gentles its body has provided me with is hardly believable. They leave the body (the skeleton is "picked" quite clean) and enter the sand (or bran, or dry earth, etc.) in the bottom of the box from which they can readily be picked. Or the box can be put direct into an aviary and the "picking" be left to the birds.

It may be thought that this method of breeding gentles is open to objection on account of the "stink." But I have followed it for a considerable number of years and can truthfully say that I have not found it so. The small birds, or pieces of meat, I use are gone (eaten) almost before they have time to become putrid; of course, if one used large birds, etc., the case would be different.

Putting my boxes out in the garden, I have to guard against the appetite of cats, rats, etc., and against heavy rain. A piece of small mesh wire-netting bent in semi-circular

How and Where to Set Flue Nets.

SIR,—Would any of your readers kindly tell me how and where to set flue nets? Any information respecting the same would be thankfully received.

NOVICE.

The Cock Chaffinch as a Muler.

SIR,—I should much like to hear that this bird has been used extensively this year as a Hybrid producer. I believe that it was used last year successfully, but that the young bird has since died, so we shall not be able to learn more about this case, but I hope others will have been stimulated to try the cross, so that we may see a good living specimen on the slow bench. The hen Chaffinch has done her share and made a name with the Bramblefinch. Perhaps the gentleman who was so successful with the cock Chaffinch will give us more particulars as to how he fed it, and what eggs were fertile. Some years ago I tried every way I could think of every means suggested to me to get this bird to breed with a Canary. I hand-reared nest after nest, so as to get good, steady cocks, and during the breeding season I gave them also kinds of wild seeds and insects. I was advised by some to give them a stimulant in their water, which I did by giving them very weak solutions of both whisky and gin, as I then thought this must bring them forward for pairing. Many a time I thought copulation had taken place, but after the eggs had been set upon I found they were clear. The late Dr. Greene, I believe, offered anyone £5 in three days (the eighties) for a Chaffinch-Canary cross, as he declared it was impossible. I never could quite see it in that light, and don't now; I still believe it can be done, and that is why I hope others have been trying; it will, I hope, yet be done if only with a novice, as they generally get the best of luck in the fascinating hobby of Hybrid breeding. Years ago it was always drilled into me that Chaffinches paired in the air—so it was not likely they would pair in a cage. The success with hen Chaffinches has knocked that delusion on the head.

HYBRID.

The "Order of the Push" at Abertillery.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Broome. Suppose for the sake of argument I admit that I was put out because I was not elected for an office, Why? Simply because there were certain members elected for office that had not the slightest interest in the Society as regards finance and progress, while I had proved myself interested and willing to work hard. His statement about me saying to different members that they were no good to the Society is not correct, but I admit telling one only. Mr. Broome accused me of the same thing at the last meeting I attended. I offered to give 10s. to the Society if they could prove that I said it to more than one, and my challenge was not taken up. In the face of this he still accuses me; how is this for fair play, "Justice"? His remark regarding having a bit of fun at my expense re judging, was brought to me by two members who said it was the talk of certain officials, but I am quite aware that Mr. Broome was not one of them. What occurred between me and a certain member outside the meeting was the cause of my being expelled, not, as Mr. Broome states, "nothing to do with the Society." His own words were that either he or I should finish, and, not being one of the clique, I had to exit. No, Mr. Broome, I have no wish to hold the reins of any Society, but you admitted to me that I was deserving of an office.

A. E. MOULE.

SIR,—In Mr. Moule's letter in CAGE BIRDS of Aug. 15 he accuses one member of the deputation that was to wait upon him with not having enough courage to see him; as a matter of fact, the said member was annoyed because we went without him, and told us about it, but the night we waited upon Mr. Moule was very wet, and, the said member fashion and either securely nailed to the wall or to a rough framework, covers the former contingency, and a piece of tin, or board, fixed at the top keeps out the rain.

Should the gentles be not properly "scoured" (clean)—i.e., be smelly and have dark streaks in them—put them for a few days in a glass jar or pickle jar partly filled with sand or bran, and they will be fit for use. For use with very small birds they can be killed by scalding (steam is best) before being fed to them.

In my next I will discuss the possibility of economising in the use of that excellent, but dear, food, canary seed.

living a long way off, we went without him. I see Mr. M. still keeps on about the clique. Why does he not say through the press what he means by the clique? If he remembers when he was asked by the deputation what he meant by it, he said he did not mean to say there was anything underhanded going on, only a certain member was always about town with another member, and so and so with another. So much for the clique. I see that he says what he had to say he generally kept till last, and also that he is not guilty of ridiculing the chairman. Now, Mr. M., let me draw your attention to one meeting only. Do you remember we were going to have a question meeting, and when the meeting had opened did you not get up and charge certain members with something you had been told, and when asked by the writer if you could prove it, your answer was No? Did not the chairman many times ask you to sit down? Did not the chairman close the meeting and leave the room? What became of the questions that night? Mr. Moule, if, as you state, you keep yours till the last, and all through something which you said you could not prove, surely your memory is not so bad that when you send to the press you forget these things? If you write again, let us have facts, and then we shall understand one another. Now, Mr. Moule, I have written this without any malice towards you, and I challenge you to refute one sentence of the above truthfully.

Cage Bird Shows and the War.

Why Not Look Upon the Bright Side?

SIR,—Engrossed as our people are in the present state of war, it is temporarily difficult to get them to pay any heed to the ordinary affairs of life. When we meet brother fanciers the war is the topic of conversation, and our birds are forgotten for the present. I shall expect to hear that many fanciers have been compelled to leave their birds, and, much worse, their homes and families in answer to the Nation's call to arms, and I shall not be at all surprised to learn that some of our shows are cancelled during the coming season. Indeed, I have already heard of secretaries having summoned their committees to discuss the situation, and to consider the advisability or otherwise of holding a show. And here I would like to offer a word of advice to secretaries and committees. Do not be too hasty in deciding to cancel your show. Though the country is not likely to return to its normal state for some considerable time, yet we should remember that the present disorganisation of the railways is due chiefly to the rapid mobilisation of the Army and Navy, and when this has been accomplished I see no reason why our railway traffic shall not return to its normal conditions. At any rate let us wait and see, and not rush into a hasty decision which we may afterwards regret.

I would also suggest to fanciers that they should continue to colour feed and prepare their birds for the autumn shows in the usual way, except that they should practice economy, where necessary, on the lines suggested by Mr. Weston in last week's issue of CAGE BIRDS, which suggestions I am glad to see are to be continued, as no doubt many will find them useful in these times of stress. Besides, as Mr. Weston has already explained, we shall find a much readier sale, and obtain better prices when the need arises, if our birds are colour-fed and in good condition.

In-breeding and Chance as Producers of Light Mules.

SIR,—Has in-breeding been the cause of present-day splendid specimens of birds (Canaries and Hybrids)? Years ago, long before any birdy papers reached the country districts or were even published, many, like myself, had by chance taken birds up as a pleasure and hobby. I heard of several varieties of Canaries that I had not got; for instance, one was the "turn Crest." I wondered what that was. It was explained to me as a Canary with a crown, or crest, on its head. I was told, too, that the owner was going to pair it with its sister. Oh, how I did laugh at this, as I always was given to understand that relations paired would produce cripples! At that time, of course, the crest on a Canary was well advanced—to those in the know, but not to country people. On going to a farm to see a friend who had some choice cattle, he related to me the breeding of some (they were Shorthorns). He said that to keep the blood pure they had inbred them. I began to think that if it would do with cattle surely it would do with birds, and I followed it out with my own birds, and must say I have had good results. In-breeding, with sense and discretion, is the great secret of success at the present time with each variety, and especially so with Mule and Hybrid breeding. There is nothing like getting the blood set; then you can introduce any other blood to attain any particular object you are aiming for. At the same time, when in-breeding only the strongest and fittest of the birds must be used. Yet any weaklings on the hen Canary side might be used for Mules—i.e., light Mule-breeding. As an example, when in-breeding with Canaries for several generations I paired some to a Goldfinch, and produced some excellent young Mules, nearly clear. This was my first start in Mule breeding, when I had to "feel in the dark" in birdy matters. How things have changed since CAGE BIRDS has been published. What have I not paid for secrets (so called) in birdy matters which at the present time we know amount to nothing at all. Even now, with all our knowledge, a great many of our best Mules and Hybrids are really bred by chance, and by novices who put pairs together and trust to luck.

AN INTERESTED BREEDER.

How Did Birds Originate?

SIR,—No longer need we wrestle with the "Origin of Species," the mutation theory, the segregating or non-segregating factors of Mendel, or any other theories of the scientists, past or present. For, behold, a new mentor has arisen! One who has had the unparalleled advantage of having "discussed this subject before," and who, with an assurance that should immediately convert all doubting Thomases, "has no hesitation" in pointing out to us the right path to follow.

Listen, therefore, all of ye, to the prophet of Beith. Let me remind anyone who may dare to question this authority, that Mr. Craig has "proved over and over again" that he is "streets ahead" of his puny opponents. It would have been somewhat better to have said "years ahead," as then we could have assigned the date of his dogma to a time perhaps contemporaneous with that of his authorities; somewhere about B.C. 1000 or 2000, shall we say? Darwin, Wallace, Mendel, de Vries, Lamarck, even those as far "ahead" as Aristotle, all and sundry, all stand confounded. No need for further correspondence, Mr. Editor; the controversy is at an end; Mr. Craig has spoken; 'nuff said.

H. PANTON.

SIR,—Mr. Watson surely does not think a bat is a bird? I thought that idea was long dead except amongst those most ignorant of Nature. Also, why on earth is an Owl not a true bird? Many birds have hairlike feathers, but none possess fur or hair. Mr. Johnson displays surprising ignorance if he thinks moths have feathers like birds! The microscope knocks that into pieces, and whatever Mr. Johnson thinks, any scientist will tell you that any living animal possessing feathers is a bird. I say the man in the street is capable of thinking for himself, but not capable, without scientific training, of arguing against years of scientific knowledge. Mr. Johnson, no doubt, thinks otherwise. Man has not been in an upright pose long enough for any protection to have formed, but this very fact shows his ancestry. We have much to complain of in our digestive organs. Are any dyspeptic animals found like those people who suffer in the human race? Very few animals suffer from indigestion; very few people are ignorant of it.

What is the Most General Sliding Scale?

SIR,—I would be glad if any of the readers of our most valued paper, CAGE BIRDS, could enlighten me as to how the various sliding scales are arranged by show committees. They seem to have many ways, and details of the one mostly in vogue would be appreciated by NOVICE.

Advice on the Construction of Cage Racks.

SIR,—Seeing in our paper, CAGE BIRDS, that advice is wanted on the making of cage racks which will stand by themselves away from the wall, and obviate damage to the wall paper, I am sending you a sketch of a rack which answers well. My own is 8ft. 3ins. long, and is made of two-inch batten 3/4 in. thick. It will stand alone anywhere, but if four pieces of battening be fixed to the four short uprights as shown in the sketch these may be screwed to the floor and the rack will be perfectly rigid.

Novice Classes Wanted at Liverpool.

SIR,—Now that the show season will soon be with us I would like to suggest to the worthy secretaries of the Liverpool O.S. the desirability of putting on more novice classes at their open show. There are no novice classes for unflighted birds, and it is rather unfair that we novices should have to show our young birds against the champions, or keep them at home (which is not good for the show). I know for a fact the novice classes at this show are the best filled of any, about 36 in a class. I am now writing of Yorkshires. I hope the secretaries will take this suggestion in the spirit in which it is meant. The unsettled state of affairs in England will somewhat diminish the long distance entries at shows, and I think by having more novice classes the shows will balance things by more entries from local breeders. I would like to hear what Liverpool novices think of the suggestion.

Judging Norwich Plainheads to the Standard.

SIR,—I really don't see why your two correspondents should have engaged themselves in an impassioned harangue over the type of Norwich Plainheads which were exhibited at a first feather show. If "Norwich Standard" is a breeder of long standing, and has done much exhibiting, he must know that as a rule the birds which win at nest feather shows are not the ones to win when moulted. Of course, there are exceptions, but I am speaking generally. Young Norwich are like colts, they sometimes develop out of all recognition; and the judges at nest feather shows are bound to give the prizes to those which are the best on the day in preference to a potential winner. I don't think "Norwich Standard" need trouble much about the tendency of present day Norwich, nor about the ideal. It is difficult to transfer the ideal from paper into one's mind, especially as the ideal in the year book of the N.P.C. is not printed life size.

While the ideal has not been bred yet, "Norwich Standard" will find some of the best Norwich in England in the Manchester district. Let him wait until the M. and N.C.O.S. show in October, and then give us his opinion on the winners there. I rather think he will be satisfied with the progress we are making towards the ideal—an ideal that combines the qualities of size and type. Now, I should say he is parsing through that phase which we all have passed through, a phase in which our minds seem to grip an ideal of the medium type, an ideal that it is possible to breed in every nest.

Quality itself is the easiest point to secure; type alone can be bred in dozens; size also is comparatively easy to get; head points are more difficult. But to get all four component parts into one specimen is almost as hard as to get gold from sea water, and when accomplished the breeder begins to feel as if there is still some balm in Gilead. That is why size, combined with quality, is looked upon with approval by judges.

"Norwich Standard" finishes his letter with an appeal to the N.P.C. to take the matter up. The N.P.C. committee is composed of fanciers who know the most difficult points to breed in a Norwich, and they have set up a standard accordingly. In any case, the N.P.C. committee are impervious to correspondence written over a "nom-de-plume."

SUB ROSA.

Stuck in the Moult, and the way out.

SIR,—I have at times received many useful hints from our most useful paper, CAGE BIRDS, so for the interest of the Fancy I trust you will give the following space. Take one pennyworth each of sweet nitre and saffron; boil saffron in one pint of water down to a gill, and when cool add two tablespoonfuls of rum. Give a teaspoonful twice a week in drinking water; this will set any kind of a bird off again.

F. STOTHARD.

Secretary of the Southern Border F.C. Leaves for the Front.

SIR,—I am afraid by the way the sub-Editor censored my letter, which appeared under the heading of "S.B.F.C. Secretary Leaves for the Front," he has got the war fever very badly, and imagines he also is at the front censoring the letters for home. By altering certain words he has entirely altered the purport of the letter, and made it appear as if it was I who had gone to the front, whereas I wrote to say it was my brother, F. W. Burton, secretary of the S.B.F.C., who had gone, and on whose behalf I wrote to explain to members of the S.B.F.C. the reason for the delay in answering letters, etc. In spite of what the sub-Editor says, it is obviously impossible, if I was at the front, I could answer letters addressed to me at 126, Lee-road, or call a meeting of the members, and I should therefore take it as a favour if you would make it clear in your next issue that any correspondence relating to the S.B.F.C. addressed to Geo. Burton, 126, Lee road, Lee Green, will be immediately dealt with. I am very sorry the alterations were made, and I think this is the first time the blue pencil has been used in any of my correspondence to good old CAGE BIRDS.

GEO. BURTON.

[This mistake unfortunately occurred through Mr. Geo. Burton referring to F. W. Burton as secretary, while he himself was described as a secretary on the printed heading of the memo. upon which the communication was written, and also because in the handwriting the "Geo." of the one resembles curiously the F.W. of the other. At the same time, we regret the error, and any inconvenience caused thereby.—Editor CAGE BIRDS.]

Woodcock Nesting in the Isle of Man.

SIR,—I would like to know if any of your readers have known of a Woodcock nesting in the British Isles, as there was one found in Glen Roy, Sonan, Isle of Man, this season. It was found on July 20, and visited daily till the 25th, when the four young ones hatched out and left the nest the same day. I have seen the shells of the eggs.

W. BODDAN.

[Although the Woodcock is a migratory bird, many remain with us all the year round, and there are many records of its breeding in England and Scotland.—Editor.]

A Bad Time for the Red Mite.

SIR,—Many are the ways and means of exterminating red mite, but the following will kill any kind of insect. Of course, the birds must not be left in the cages during the process, but one application will be sufficient, no matter how strong a hold the mites have got. You may experience a little difficulty in obtaining it, but if you are prepared to sign for it, there will be no particular trouble; the cost is about one shilling. Spirit of turpentine, 4 ozs.; alcohol, 4 ozs.; corrosive sublimate, 1 oz.; gum camphor, 1 oz. Bottle, shake well before use, and apply sparingly with a brush.

"A Goldfinch Fertilises Thirty-seven Eggs."

Forty-six the Record this Week.

SIR,—I am sending you a list of Goldfinch-Canary Mules which I reared from four hen Canaries and a Goldfinch, which I picked out of about two dozen caught by myself in Blacklion, Co. Cavan, in 1911. All the hens are splashed birds, and all the young Mules are dark. The Goldfinch was never with any hen more than three days, and in some cases he had only a day.

No. 1 hen: 4 eggs in January, unfertile; 5 in April, all reared; 4 in May, all reared; 4 in June, 3 reared; 4 on July 15, hen still with these. No. 2 hen: 2 in April, 1 died; 3 in May, 1 dead in shell, 1 died at three weeks; July, 2 reared. No. 3 hen: June, 4, young, all died; hen refused to feed; July, 3 reared. No. 4 hen: July, 2 young; Aug., 2 young, still in nest. Totals: 35 fertile eggs, 27 young reared, 8 dead.

JAS. MORRISON.

SIR,—In reply to the enquiry of F. Groom in CAGE BIRDS of Aug. 8, I write to say that I put a Goldfinch and Bullfinch together this season, and the Bullfinch has laid 21 eggs. I have three young two weeks old. The same Finch has been running with five Canaries, and he has fertilised 43 eggs from them; that makes 46, and by the look of him he would like to be fighting for England at present.

WAKEFIELD ROLLER C.C.

Meeting Aug. 10; Mr. Hesling presided over an average attendance. After a long discussion it was decided, owing to the national crisis, to abandon the annual show for 1914.—H. Roebuck, Hon. Sec.

ANNFIELD PLAIN C.B.S.

Meeting Aug. 8, Mr. R. Hutchinson chair. There was a good turn up of members, and we had a good meeting. Decided to have a few open Canary classes at annual show. Don't forget to turn up when next meeting is called and discuss the matter.—W. Thompson, Sec.

SOUTH MOOR C.B.S.

Meeting Aug. 15, with a good turn out of members. Schedule arranged for annual show with 41 classes, including 3 novice classes, 1 in each Canary section. New members made: Messrs. W. Lindsay, R. Bewick, W. McNay, J. Turnbull.—C. Davison, Sec.

SWINDON F. AND F.A.

Special meeting Central Hotel, Regent-st., Aug. 12. Present: Messrs. H. R. Halliday (chair), A. Ireland, T. Wilkins, J. Hutchings, E. Ireland, W. Greenwood, J. Tanner, L. Lewis, A. C. Mockridge, W. Judd, J. Tarrant, D. Hoare, E. Wallington, T. Rivers, I. Bennett, E. Jefferies and W. J. Moran. Decided, as all the halls in the town were engaged by the Government, that we postpone indefinitely our annual show, and cancel our monthly meetings for the present.—W. J. Moran, Sec.

WELSH C.B.C.

General meeting, Ship and Bell, Merthyr, Aug. 17, Mr. G. T. Jones presiding. Present, Messrs. G. T. Jones, G. L. Harber, E. Powell, F. H. Cook, J. H. Jones, and A. E. Brown. Mr. J. Llewellyn, of Tredegar, was made a member. Patronage given to the following societies: Cardiff, Tredegar, Upper Rhondda, and Nantrebach. Upon a suggestion of running the Club show in connection with Tredegar open show, Mr. Powell was instructed to place this matter before the Tredegar Society, and ascertain terms, etc., and submit same to the Sec. for the Committee to deal with. Several members have not yet paid their subs., and I should like to receive them without further delay, to enable me to make a report concerning the running of the Club show, and also for the making up of a financial statement, and I appeal to all in arrears to give me their kind assistance by sending sub. early. I shall also be pleased to enrol new members; sub. 3s. per ann.—A. E. Brown, 66, Clare Street, Merthyr.

ALTRINCHAM OPEN C.B.S.

Experiences During the Breeding Season.

Meeting Aug. 12, Station Cafe, Mr. T. Harrison presiding. Three 10-minute papers were given on "Novice Experiences During Breeding Season," by Messrs. Leah, Broadbent, and Heatley, and were extremely interesting and occasionally amusing. No. 1 paper stated how the novice, having three British birds, and hearing of a proposed cage birds society to be formed in the district, decided to become a member. Then purchasing two supposed hen Canaries, he decided to try his fortune at breeding some Mules. Soon these supposed hens showed signs of house-keeping, and on being supplied with nesting material, set about business in good style; result, three fertile eggs, all Canaries, much to our novice's surprise, but the hen failing to feed them they died in two or three days. The hen Canary was then mated with a Linnet; result, three more eggs, one only being fertile. This young Mule at the end of three weeks surprised its owner by its power of flight, in escaping through the window. Two more nests of Mules were obtained, three and two nestlings being the result, which have since died, leaving our friend with hopes for better luck next season, and still determined to succeed. No. 2 paper: This novice fancier is the possessor of an aviary, and was more successful. He wished to breed some Hybrids as well as Mules and Canaries, and has succeeded in rearing four very fine Siskin-Redpoll Hybrids from the first nest, and at the end of three weeks, the hen going to nest again, produced six eggs, which were all fertile, only one of these being reared; and this by a Canary hen. Four Linnet eggs placed with a Canary hen resulted in four fine nestlings, but from two eggs of the Cirl Bunting he was not so fortunate, the eggs being punctured. From pairs of Goldfinch-Bullfinch and Chaffinch-Canary, he had no result, eggs being clear; in two cases the eggs were eaten. Our friend has also been troubled with mice; however, he has ended the season with a total of 25 nestlings—Canaries, Mules, Hybrids, and British, and attributes some success to the use of rain water for drinking and bathing, and to not starting too early in breeding. Questions and Answers.

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS

- (1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and conclude with either the correct name or a pseudonym.
- (2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query.
- (3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.
- (4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.
- (5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated on the left-hand corner of the query.
- (6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desirable queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest.
- (7)—If an answer by post is desired from our specialists, a postal order for sixpence must accompany any query relating to sickness of birds, or a shilling in ordinary enquiries, with a stamped and addressed envelope in either case. Dead birds must not be sent to the office (see Post-owners).
- (8)—All who desire letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence. All the fees received from this source will be handed over in full to the "Referee's" Poor Children's Fund (London).
- (9)—All queries must be addressed to the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Postcards are not admissible.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must, of course, be sent to the Editor.

Canaries.—Claude St. John, British Birds, Mules, and Hybrids.—H. Norman, Foreign Birds.—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Wild Bird Life.—H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc., of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Borders, Scotch, or any other variety of Canary, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his questions for answer to some leading specialist on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

IS SEA-SAND SUITABLE? (S. A. M. James).—If it is collected from a clean and unpolluted section of beach, sea-sand is a very suitable and beneficial covering for the cage floors at all times, not only during the moult. When it can be readily procured it may always be used in preference to ordinary sand.

BORDERS AND COLOUR BREEDING (F. E. H.).—(1) The parental instinct varies more or less in every breed, but, taken as a whole, the Border Fancy is an excellent parent and will rear its own young without the slightest trouble or assistance. (2) Although you wish to breed clears I would not advise you to begin with two quite clear birds. This method would certainly give you the greatest possible number of clears in the young, but the natural depth of tone of the colour would be very apt to deteriorate, and the clears become faded and washy in colour. It would be much better to have one clear and the other a slightly ticked, or a bird with light eye-marks only. From such a pair you should get a very nice proportion of clear birds, and the rest more or less ticked, and probably none would be very much variegated. A certain amount of the green, or dark, blood is a very important factor in keeping up a rich, deep tone of colour in the clears, though it is not essential to have the dark blood so strong that the great majority of the young come ticked or more or less heavily variegated.

BOWEL TROUBLE. (A Reader of "C.B." T. T. G.).—I suspect there is some internal derangement or ovarian disease which is the real cause of the swelling around the vent, but it is impossible to dogmatise on this point without seeing the swelling. If it is a valuable bird your best course would be to show it to a veterinary surgeon for his advice. In any case I very much doubt the bird being of any further use for breeding. As she is now on colour food treatment is somewhat hampered. You may, however, try the following course for a month or so, and stated the writer had had very good results from the first round, but, being a novice, had not obtained what was possible from the following rounds; from experience gained he would be better prepared next season. He had 29 nestlings (Canaries) from four pairs of birds; 19 were alive and doing well. He had obtained the best results from egg and bread as against any other soft food, and had also paid great attention to cleanliness. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the three members for their very interesting accounts. Next meeting Wednesday, Aug. 26, Station Cafe. Paper on Green and Cinnamon Borders by Mr. Middleton; a good attendance is requested.—Chas. Bailey, Hon. Sec.

then report result, when I will advise you further if necessary. Continue your present dietary, except that you should cut out all hemp, groats, crushed oats, or oatmeal that it may contain. Give a half-ripe plantain stalk daily, or, when this is not available, a spray of watercress. In the drinking-water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea every second day for a week, and in the next week dissolve in the water a crystal of sulphate of soda as above, a crystal of sulphate of iron half as big, and add six drops of diluted sulphuric acid every second day. In the third and fourth weeks repeat this in the same order. Do not interfere with the swelling in any way.

CLAW HANGS LIMP (S. D. C.).—If only the claw is affected—that is, the hard, horny part at the tip of the toe—it has probably been torn out at the base by being caught and held fast in a wire or something and the bird struggling to release itself. In this case the claw will slough off in the course of a week or two, and you cannot do better than avoid all interference and leave the cure to Nature, only keeping the bird as quiet as you can, avoiding all unnecessary fluttering, and see that the perches are well fitting, of a proper size, and firmly and conveniently placed in order to make it as comfortable as possible for the bird to get about on one foot during the interval.

A "BELGIUM" CANARY (R. G. Judd).—I presume you mean a Belgian, which is the name usually employed in this country. It will be quite correct to feed it during the moulting period just as you would a Norwich or any other variety which was not being colour fed. As a staple diet give a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape, and in addition give separately about every third day a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle and broken groats, and on the intervening days give first a morsel of some green salad, and next half a teaspoonful of egg-food or an equivalent quantity of bread and milk well sprinkled with maw seed. Keep bird in a fairly equable and not quite cold temperature, allow it to bathe as freely as it likes, and when it has nearly finished moulting, which you may know by the new quills beginning to show about the head and neck, add 20 drops of chemical food to the drinking water four times a week until the moult is quite complete.

A WHEEZING ROLLER (Hopeful Tyro).—You do not say how long the bird has been affected, and as the medicine you are giving is the best you could possibly use, I rather suspect the case is a chronic one, which may be relieved only, but not cured. Try the following for a month or so. Keep the bird in a moderate temperature, free from cold draughts, dust, or the fumes of burning lights. For one week give a diet of plain canary seed only with a spray of green-food daily, and every second day add to the water six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much sulphate of soda as will cover a sixpence. After this give a staple of two parts canary to one part summer rape, and every third day a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel-nut well sprinkled with maw seed; on the intervening days first a spray of green-food, next half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, millet, niger, and teazle. Begin again with the chlorodyne mixture you have been using, and give 20 drops in the water two days in every three for a week, and every second day for two or three weeks afterwards as may seem necessary.

SIT ALL IN A HEAP (Roller).—It seems hardly likely that the birds have quite finished the moult at twelve weeks old. Possibly the moult has been checked by some means. Keep them in a comfortable temperature, give a staple diet of a mixture of two parts canary to one part summer rape, add as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence to the water for three consecutive days, and after this treat as you will see advised to "R. G. Judd" in this issue, but before you begin to give the chemical food add six drops of tincture of gentian and four of aromatic sulphuric acid to the water for two days. The seed mixture of which you sent sample is a very good one for occasional use, but it will not be necessary to give this whilst you are using the mixture named in the reply to which I refer you.

FIR AND ACCOMMODATION (T. J.).—

(1) No, I do not think that nibbling the tips of the fir branches will be at all harmful to the birds. If it is objectionable in the way of causing the branches to require too frequent renewal, you might perhaps largely prevent it by giving a bunch of seed-heads of grasses, plantain stalks, and such like things for them to amuse themselves with, which would help to divert their attention from the fir branches. (2) By keeping the floor well sanded, and renewing this as it shows signs of becoming fouled, you could keep from 60 to 65 birds the size of a Norwich Canary in the wired-off space.

UNSTABLE NORWICH COCK. (The Down).—Sorry, but it would be impossible to say with any degree of certainty what is wrong with the bird without seeing it. I rather suspect that the substance you mention is due to some displacement of the internal organs, but it may possibly be nothing more serious than an accumulation of fat. The latter, however, should not affect its ability to get about to such an extent as seems to be the case with the bird now. Try what the following treatment will do for it, and if no better in, say, a month, write again and repeat full particulars, and also say what is the colour and general appearance of the swelling. As staple diet give a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition to this give a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with maw seed every third day, and on the intervening days give first a spray of watercress, and next half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, millet, black rape, teazle, and broken groats. In the drinking-water add twelve drops of syrup of buckthorn every second day for a week, and follow this with four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a fortnight. Keep the bird in a comfortable temperature, and see that its cage is fitted with fairly large perches, which it can grip quite comfortably and strongly, and see that they are firmly fixed so as not to wriggle about as the bird moves about on them.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

TROUBLE WITH BLACKBIRD (A. B. C.).—I am very much inclined to think that your bird is a hen, as you have had it twelve months and it has not sung. Further, you say his beak is partly yellow, whereas a cock bird in spring and summer would have a beak all yellow. You should have no difficulty whatever in deciding the sex at the age it is, for a cock bird is quite black all over; a hen would be dark in colour, and have a mottled throat and breast. If it is a hen I would advise you to give it its liberty before the summer is any further advanced and while food is plentiful. If it is a cock bird, and you decide to keep it, treat it in the following manner. First give it an aperient, as much Glauber Salts as will cover a sixpence dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of water; repeat in a couple of days, then make an entire change in the diet, procure some good insectile food, and mix it with scraped raw carrot, chopped lettuce, or other green-food. Offer fruit of all kinds, bananas, grapes, pears and partly decayed apples, also plenty of insects, many of which you can now collect in the open. As a change, occasionally give a little bread or biscuit soaked in hot milk, or crushed puppy biscuit with some gravy poured over it. If you feed him in this manner all through the moult he should come through quite perfect in plumage. Have your Nutshell booklet on the Blackbird? If not, I would advise you to procure one at once, 2d., post free, from our publisher.

FEEDING BIRDS IN AVIARY (Gold-chaff).—With the birds you intend to put in your aviary, there is not much chance of crossing, although this does take place sometimes when least expected. I think you could do with one more pair, and would suggest that you have Siskins, these are capital aviary birds, and their greenish colouring with black markings, makes a good combination with Goldies and Chaffinches. You should have either separate seed hoppers, or a self filling hopper with two compartments, one for canary seed and the other for summer rape. In addition you will have to supply mixed seeds; more particularly for the Goldies, which cannot, as a rule, go very long without a change of diet. Make a mixture of four parts teazle, two parts hemp, and one of linseed. Give them some of this three times a week, say half a teaspoonful to each bird, and on alternate days the same quantity of wild seed mixture, this you can purchase in packet form; see that it is composed of wild seeds only, not a mixture of canary, rape, hemp, etc., with a little wild seed added. A few sunflowers daily will be useful, particularly during the winter. If all your birds are in good health, they should stand the cold weather during the winter months, providing you keep them well supplied with food and water. During frosty weather empty the water vessels at sundown and fill with tepid water in the early morning. Keep them well supplied with bundles of seedling wild food, and during the winter a little sprouting seed. An apple suspended from the roof will amuse the more active inmates.

DESIGN FOR AN AVIARY (C.G.H.).—I have carefully looked through your design and I think it should do admirably. I note you have arranged for plenty of light in the inside portion, which is quite correct, if too dark the birds will seldom go into it. I would advise you to always feed them in there; your skylight should be raised an inch or so from the level of the roof, or I fear you will have some difficulty in keeping it water tight. You should make a lobby just inside the door to prevent the escape of birds when entering the aviary for feeding or cleaning purposes. If you do not think of having a lobby I would suggest that you reduce the height of your door and have a window or a strip of wire netting above it, this would enable you to drive the birds away from the door on entering. (2) Give all the fresh air you can so to harden them for removal outside later on, which should be done as each one finishes its moult. If you intend to keep your birds simply for amusement I have nothing to say against your collection, but if you are trying to produce young ones, then you have too many cock Linnets, and I would suggest that you only put in one of them, and have a cock Goldfinch and hen Bullfinch in place of them.

COLOUR FEEDING LARKS (F.W.B.).—The present method of colour-feeding is not considered to be detrimental to the health of captive cage birds. Good quality colour food is simply composed of vegetable matter, and birds eat it without any trouble. If you mix it with the bird's soft food, commencing to give it in a mild form, and increasing to full strength, it is certain to have an influence upon his plumage, but so much depends upon the health of the bird while casting its feathers. In addition, dark plumaged birds do not show the effects of the colour food, so much as lighter ones. (2) It makes the bird richer in colour, and therefore somewhat better for exhibition purposes, although size, shape and markings would count for more than colour. (3) The colour food should be given some time before the bird commences to drop into moult, and should be mixed with the soft food, as before mentioned. (4) The Crested Lark is rare in the British Islands, but is somewhat common upon the Continent, particularly in the central and southern parts. (5) At this time of the year you should give your Nightingale as few mealworms as possible, because one is able to collect live ants' eggs, caterpillars, flies, gentles, etc., that are of greater food value, and not so liable to interfere with his digestive arrangements; of course, during the winter months when other live food is unobtainable mealworms should be used, but even then if his soft food is of good quality and he eats it freely, he should not have more than four to six per day.

MULE IN MOULT (W. Berry).—Your bird is evidently moulting, quite a natural occurrence at this time of the year. I am afraid you were hardly careful enough about him, and allowed him to hang in a draught. This prevents the proper growth of the new feathers, and in some cases entirely stops the moult. Keep him in an equable temperature as far as you can, and quite away from strong currents of air, but at the same time let the room be ventilated. If he is not shedding his feathers, partly cover the cage with a thin cloth and put a few shreds of meadow saffron in his drinking water with ten drops of whiskey. His seed should be three parts canary, two parts teazle, one part hemp, half part each of linseed and rape, give sunflower seeds three times a week, also a daily supply of seedling grass, chickweed, shepherd's purse, and ripe plantain. Let him bathe in the morning on fine days. In about a fortnight's time give him a teaspoonful of chemical food in his drinking water (first boiling it, or it will not mix) three days a week. A little hard-boiled egg occasionally will assist him. With this treatment he should get through the moult safely and commence to sing again.

STOCK MIXTURE FOR FINCHES (Finch Lover).—Glad to hear your Goldie is doing well, and hope he will have a good moult. It is a rather difficult matter to give a stock mixture for all Finches as they require different treatment, but you may be able to manage them in the following manner. Make up these mixtures:—No. 1, canary 3 parts, teazle 3 parts, rape and linseed 1 part each. No. 2, hemp 2 parts, niger 2 parts, maw 1 part. Also purchase a good blend of wild seeds which some firms put up in packets. Feed all your birds on No. 1 mixture as a staple food, then give the Goldfinch a spoonful of No. 2 every other day, and on alternate days a spoonful of the wild seeds. The Siskin could have No. 3 twice a week and No. 2 occasionally, but if at all droopy during the moult it could be given fairly often. The Linnet, Redpoll, and Twite would do with the wild seeds twice a week. No. 2 could be given later on if you wanted to get them into song. Of course, you would supply them all with seedling grass, etc., while you are able to get it. A good stock cage for Finches is 14 inches in length, 7 inches deep, and 11 inches high, the front bar should be 3½ inches deep with the two perches fixed from the top of it to the back. I think our British Bird Manual, Part 1, Hardbills, would be particularly useful to you.

THRUSH WITH FITS (Anxious One).—I expect you are not treating your bird properly, but as you do not tell me how you are feeding it I am unable to point out your error. You had better give him as much Glauber salts as will cover a sixpence, dissolved in two table-spoonsful of water, and repeat in two or three days. Get a pound of good insectile food and feed the bird on this mixed with scraped raw carrot. After a time you can vary it with crushed poppy biscuits (best quality) soaked in gray or hot water. Let him have fruit of all kinds, and all the insects you can procure for him. Fits usually occur through faulty feeding, so if you follow out the above you should soon pull him round. If not, please write again, giving full particulars. I would advise you to get our Nutshell booklet on the Blackbird, 2½d. post free, from this office, or 2d. from your local news-agent, it would assist you greatly in your management.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

HOW TO TELL (F. Lackey).—Not easy to write up, but an acclimatised Grey should be steady (of course an acclimatised bird in bad condition, apart from steadiness, might easily be passed by the tyro as a new arrival), in good feather, and will never be cheap, except in very exceptional circumstances. Its very demeanour bespeaks its acquaintance with cage life and domesticity. New arrivals are more or less wild, have a scared demeanour, and are dull and lifeless when left to themselves—they are feeling the re-action of the voyage and seem to have no joy in life. If you are offered a Grey cheap as an acclimatised bird, you can be sure either it is a comparatively new arrival that has been slightly steadied; it has some vice which makes it objectionable to its owner; the vendor, through stress of circumstances, is compelled to sell at once; or he is quite ignorant about birds. Do not accept the two latter conclusions without proof. A Grey Parrot that is acclimatised and steady, which does not scream, and has begun to speak a few words, has a minimum value of five pounds.

CONSERVATORY AVIARY (Miss D.).—(1) You could keep at least 60 birds comfortably. I would not include Doves, and I think I would leave out Green Singing Finches. To the others you name you could add Zebra Finches, Alario Finches, Cape Canaries, Ruficauda, and Melba Finches, and Diamond Sparrows—all seed-eaters. (2 and 3) Do not have the oil-stoves, it is too risky; the least neglect or carelessness of a maid on any night would mean the loss of your birds and the spoiling of your plants. If you have pots full of grass, growing canary seed, etc., standing about, also bunches of seedling and flowering grass, etc., the plants may not be damaged much, and they are easily renewed. A large bay tree or two would be useful and look well, also one or two eucalyptus plants. You could keep the Yellow-wing Sugar Bird at the temperature you name, but you must not allow the milk-sop to remain frozen for long together in severe periods; I would not put the birds out till next spring. Your method of having the birds in the house in a cage during the winter is practised by many. (4) I have kept Sugar Birds in as low a temperature as you name—36 to 38 degrees. They have not yet been bred in captivity, but success is sure to be attained in the end. (6) See reply to 2 and 3. (7) Not if the cages are kept below the level of the gas-lights. (8) Any local builder would let you have some old mortar rubbish from time to time. (9) I think you'll be wise not to include the Green Singing Finches.

WHY DID THEY DIE? (Gram).—You give me no details as to what kind of quarters they are kept in, whether in a cage, indoor or outdoor aviary. Either the respective pairs quarrelled and the young got thrown out in the scurmage, or injured while in the nest, or the trouble may have been that from the beginning they were deficient in some respect. Your diet is quite satisfactory, but in future cut all the stalk out of the lettuce leaves before supplying to the birds. Have you only two husks hung up? If so, put up another two at least, four would be better, then there will be no quarrelling for quarters for the second brood. It is always best in such cases to send one of the bodies for post mortem examination (see rules), as no diagnosis by other means can be entirely satisfactory; though from full details a shrewd deduction may be made—regret I cannot be more definite.

GREEN AVADAVATS, ETC. (J.W.).—(1) The song of the Green Avadavat is very similar to that of the Common, or Red, Avadavat, but is not so constantly uttered; it is, however, distinctly heard, especially during the nesting season. (2) Canary, white millet, millet sprays, and green-food suffices. All these small ornamental Finches thrive fairly well on the same treatment. (3) The treatment given in the Nutshell "Waxbills" will suffice for the Cordon Bleus, though these birds are rather fond of an occasional mealworm, or small insect. These also have a pleasing little song, but it is not so frequently uttered as that of the Common Avadavat.

INDIAN PARROT (G.A.S.).—If your all-wire cage is an ordinary Parrot-cage it should be strong enough to resist the Parrot's beak, but an ordinary all-wire cage, such as is usually used for Finches, would, of course, soon be bitten to pieces. Stick a piece of a branch, with the bark on, from bottom of cage to top—it can slant right across cage if needful—the said branch can be about as thick as one's wrist, replace it when cut to pieces. All Parrots climb about their cages, and exercise their beaks on the wires, but if yours is an ordinary Parrot cage it should have a fair life against such attacks. If your bird is a new arrival it will steady down as it becomes accustomed to its quarters and general surroundings.

INDIAN GREEN PARRAKEETS (J. H. Fowler).—They are a true pair, or young would not be found in the shell. Usually the cock feeds the hen on the nest. Please repeat your query in full next week and state whether they are kept in a cage or aviary. If the former is the case it may be lack of exercise, etc., which causes them to cease incubation just before eggs are due to hatch. These birds have reared young in more than one instance in outdoor aviaries this season. If you will give me full details of their quarters, including nest receptacle, I shall probably then be in a position to assist you.

WHAT IS IT? (J. W. Davies).—A bird three or four times the size of a Rose-ring would be something approaching a small fowl. I think your bird may be the Eupatorian Parrakeet, a species of large Rose-ring or Ring-neck, some Alexandrines look as large again as a Ring-neck, and your bird may be that species; your description would fit either. If you could give me in inches the length of the bird from tip of beak to tip of tail, also separate measurement of tail, state whether the bird is all green apart from the neck ring and wing patches, and say if there is any other variegation elsewhere, I can give you a definite answer.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

B.K.G.—Exhaustion following internal hæmorrhage, the result of violence. The body cavity was full of blood, but all organs were perfectly healthy.

SUDLEY.—Inflammation of the bowels due to the ingestion of irritant matter. I can scarcely think that moths can have any effect in this way. I should advise a cessation of the linseed during the warm weather, and a Drawn by H. Goochchild.

The Red-spotted Bluethroat spends most of the year among the mountains of Norway. It occurs in England as an autumn passage-migrant, and occasionally as a spring visitor. It is a bird favoured by Scottish judges, but most south-country judges "pass" this Warbler as not being eligible for British bird classes.

The Lapland Bunting, which ranges during summer throughout the Arctic regions, is a more frequent visitor than the Bluethroat to our shores in autumn, recently more regularly than in older times, but it is still to be reckoned among the rarer British birds, and generally takes a high place on the show bench.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers in all transactions; the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

Genuine Japanese bird lime, guaranteed to stand all weathers and hold any bird from wren to rook, 1/2b. 6d., 1/2b. 10d., 1lb. 1/6; sample, 3d., all post free. Absolutely everything required by catchers in stock, and all guaranteed brand new goods; send stamp for full printed list, which also gives hints on net making. Practically every professional catcher in the Kingdom uses my articles, and I guarantee every purchaser fullest satisfaction or return his money in full. During the term of the war many people will probably have spare time; to what better use can they put it than to have some real good sport in bird catching, and at same time augment their income by disposing of their surplus catches, but to insure this they must have serviceable articles made by a man who thoroughly understands what is required for successful catching. Every article sent out by me is guaranteed to have been properly tested and of the very best quality as supplied to my own catchers.

SPRATT'S PATENT LIMITED, 24/25, FENCHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

GOLDFINCHES, BULLIES, LINNETS, ETC.

We are patronised, and have been for 40 years, by every leading Crystal Palace judge and exhibitor, so our reputation stands 2nd to none. Editor of this journal has seen scores of original testimonials for birds we have supplied, which have bred hundreds of winning Mules. So if you intend buying British birds, buy from us, who have hundreds each week to pick from. We don't send out birds straight from the field; all are well on seed; guaranteed. Real English 1913 cock Goldfinches, 1/6, 2/- each, three 4/-, six 7/-; extra picked for muling, 2/6, 3/- each, three 5/-, six 8/6; cock Bullfinches, 2/-, hens 1/-; Lancashire cock Linnets, 8d., 10d., 1/- each, three 1/6, six 2/6; Greenfinches, 6d. each, three 1/3; cages, for any of above, from 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/3, 1/6, and 2/-. Seed grinding mills, 1/6; send for catalogue of everything. Established 50 years: Sandiford, Bird Specialist and Judge, Preston, Lancs.; also 89, Selcote-st., Shoreditch, London.

 I HAVE three grand singing cock Skylarks singing incessantly day and gas light; been in my possession since last January; 1/- each; worth 7 6 each; compelled to sell: Woods, Cross-st., Dunstable.

SOFTBILLS: the smaller species; full information upon their proper feeding and management in captivity, is given by H. J. Fulljames in "Nutshell No. 25," which also deals with hand-rearing, and describes the collection of ants' eggs, 2d. post free, from: "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. (2d. from agents; see list on another page).
 SOFTBILL keepers, take expert advice before proceeding to buy and keep the larger species of insectivorous birds. You will then have no trouble in keeping your pets in the best of health. This advice is offered in "Nutshell No. 26," by H. J. Fulljames. It is a wonderful little work, dealing with most varieties in a highly interesting and instructive manner. Foods and their preparation, and the various styles of cages also receive full attention. Can you breed Mealworms? This booklet tells you how. Post free, 2d., from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Look at our list of agents; call on the nearest and get it for 2d.

FUTURE OF THE BIRD FANCY.

PROSPECTS EXCEEDINGLY BRIGHT.

NATIONAL SHOW CERTAIN TO BE HELD.

CAGE bird fanciers seem to have set their teeth and to have determined that so far as they are concerned Britain's motto, "Business as Usual" shall be their watchword, and though a few societies have found themselves compelled by force of circumstances to abandon their fixtures, on the whole a laudable determination to face whatever difficulties may be presented is the prevailing spirit.

We are in a position to assure our readers that under any circumstances short of the gravest national danger the National Bird Show will be held. Mr. Ramsden has unfortunately been compelled to indefinitely postpone his autumn fixture, and Manchester Show authorities, we believe, are in very much the same frame of mind. But as against this there is a big movement on foot to run a huge amalgamated London Show under the joint auspices of the London Cage Bird Societies, and there is every prospect, so we are informed, of the various associations sinking their friendly rivalry for the moment and combining their resources for the benefit of the Cage Bird Fancy.

No Insurmountable Difficulties.

Whether this London show will be confined entirely to Metropolitan fanciers, or be open to a wider area, is a matter that, of course, will come under discussion, but we are confident that there are no difficulties that can be suggested by the timorous that cannot be overcome by a little ingenuity and perseverance.

It behoves every bird lover who has the interest of the bird fancy at heart to set his shoulder to the wheel and do whatever lies in his power to prevent the interest in the fancy from being suspended, even temporarily.

We do not, of course, expect the able bodied young men who are better engaged in defending their country to interest themselves actively in such matters as bird culture, but for those who unfortunately are compelled to keep out of the firing line, or are prevented by circumstances from taking their proper share in the protection of our country, the carrying on of the commercial interests of the country in exactly the same way as usual should be their chief duty, thereby helping to steady the nation as a whole.

Let us consider for a moment what would be the result if we did not. If in a feverish state of panic at the warlike state of the country we abandon all those peaceful pursuits which we have followed in days of prosperity thousands of people will be deprived of their means of living, and destitution and idleness will be the forerunners of famine and pestilence.

These may seem terrifying words to use in such a connection as the culture of birds, but in view of the fact that the hobby has provided a source of income for many years to thousands of poor people, and has supplemented the income of a great many people who receive insufficient pay, they are not so out of place as they might on first thoughts be considered.

We tender advice and help.

We should feel obliged if every secretary who finds himself in doubt or difficulty as to the holding of a show would communicate with us and place his individual position clearly before us and ask for our advice and help. Whatever assistance we can afford a society to hold a show is at its disposal. In former years we have had far too many shows being held on the same date, with the consequence of insufficient support to each individually, and it may be that with fewer fixtures the individual rewards of societies will be more commensurate with their labours.

We would suggest to the larger societies in connection with the alleged difficulties of transport that they obtain representatives in different parts of the country to personally convoy the exhibits to and from their exhibitions.

The value of the shows to the fancier cannot be overestimated. They enable bird breeders to put into comparison the results of their season's work. They provide valuable material for future breeding operations, and a very useful market for surplus stock in cases where it is essential that the stock should be personally examined. They have a big educational effect, and are very instrumental in increasing the number of recruits to the bird fancy.

Should any of our readers have any suggestions to make, or opinions to express on the vital question to us all of preserving the interest in the bird fancy, we should be glad to consider and publish them.

Bravo! Liverpool O.S.

SIR,—At a fully attended meeting of the Liverpool O.S., held Aug. 20, it was unanimously decided to hold an Open Show on Oct. 23 and 24, in spite of the war. We are sure that all exhibitors who have supported us in the past will do so this year, as our method is to have all railway birds away, so as to reach home on Saturday night. There are only a dozen of us, who will stand or fall by the result of the show, but we have the help of all the fanciers in Liverpool in packing up, and so we shall carry on the good work which has been achieved in the past. We decided to put on 18 novice classes, which includes two unflighted classes for clear, etc., Yorkshires; this will answer Friend Rawsthorne. Also there are two novice Green classes outside the G.S.A. competition, and we are reviving the Lizard section again.

METCALFE AND GREEN, Hon. Secs.

Joint Members' Shows Suggested on the Tyne-side.

SIR,—A special meeting of the Newcastle C.B.S. was held at Purves' Cafe on Aug. 20, to consider our position with regard to holding an open show. There was a moderate attendance of members, who discussed the question in all its bearings; several suggestions were put forward, and the decision deferred till the September monthly meeting, when it is hoped there will be a full attendance of members, and a wise and careful decision arrived at. We are unable to get the Cambridge Hall this year, as it is a military hospital. A suggestion was to abandon the open show and confer with the Tyneside societies to see if a joint members' show could be held in conjunction with the Northern Specialist Clubs. Another was that we should curtail our schedule and hold a show on a smaller scale than usual, without members' classes, but giving specials for members in the open classes (if they can be got), thus limiting our liabilities. The Co-operative Hall was mentioned as a likely place, and the vice-chairman asked to see if it is vacant for our date. There was a decided feeling against abandoning the show altogether, so that it seems as though the decision will rest between holding a small open show and that of holding a combined members' show, with as many other societies as will join us.

THE POSITION TO-DAY: VIEWS OF LEADING SOCIETIES & FANCIERS.

How Clapham C.B.A. Meets the Case.

SIR,—An extraordinary general meeting of the members of the Clapham and District C.B.A. was held Aug. 18 to decide whether or not an open show be held this year. The Secretary having reported that the hall we had secured had been seized by the authorities for an indefinite period, it was at first suggested to have only a Members' Show. A proposition was however eventually adopted, after much discussion, to make the show open to all who will bring their birds, it being the general opinion of the majority that whilst plenty of open shows would be abandoned in the country it would be possible to get together quite a decent show confined more or less to Londoners. The schedule for this show was fixed, and the entry fee decided at 1s. per cage with an addition for expenses of 6d. per entry form for members and 1s. for non-members. Prize money on sliding scale.

Exhibitors will Regret any Cancelling of Shows.

"Think Well," advises a well-known Exhibitor and Judge.

SIR,—I notice that Wimbledon C.B.S. has cancelled its show, and is going to run a Members' Show instead. I am sure a number of exhibitors will regret this. As a member, I believe myself they would have had a good show and gate, and I think the entries would have been up to the average, seeing that there were less than 200 birds that possibly came by rail last year, and this could easily have been made up if we all did our best and persuaded other fanciers to enter some birds. I see it is very probable that the Dairy Show will take place, and if they can undertake such a large show as this surely Cage Bird Shows ought to continue. I, like F. Collins, would say do not be too hasty in cancelling your shows, particularly in and around London, where there are so many exhibitors who would only be too pleased to make an additional entry or two to make them a success. Watford's sensible action in not deciding at their first meeting to cancel their show, but to adjourn so that they could think over the matter, I very much appreciate, and if they should decide to run their show I will do my utmost to help to make it a success, not only by my entries, but in trying to get others. I only hope that other secretaries and committees will think well before cancelling their shows and, if possible, run them to brighten up fanciers in this sad time by allowing us to be able to make entries and chat with one another over the awards.

T. EASTERLING.

Events Prove Too Much for the Watford C.B.S.

SIR,—An adjourned special general meeting of the Watford C.B.S. was held on Aug. 24 at the Conservative Hall to consider the Show Committee's recommendation that "the open show for 1914 be abandoned in view of the war." The adoption of the recommendation was moved by Mr. J. Goodall, seconded by Mr. Watts, and the matter was fully discussed. The views advanced were that the L. and N.W. Ry. had intimated that at present they could not deal with any live stock, and such would be liable to delay in transit. Another was that they were standing at a considerable expense, and as they had to depend a great deal locally for the gate, and the working people were only on half-time, they would be liable to a big loss; their funds were not sufficient to face a deficit. The motion was eventually carried nem con. A Members' Show will be held later in the year.

R. J. PRETTY, Chairman.

A Comprehensive Survey of the Situation.

SIR,—To-day the Cage Bird Fancy is in the cuttlefish grip of war, from which it cannot escape uninjured, though its wounds may be merely superficial and temporary. Already some Societies have arrested their stream of energy to be diverted—where? Already we have derelict stocks, or studs of cage birds which has enjoyed, up till now, the loving care of skilled fanciers, but which will now experience—what?—and go—where?

'Tis well when suddenly thrown in darkness to dwell therein just long enough to discern more easily the ways and means which lead to sunshine and to safety, any panic or rush from the inky gloom is dangerous and must be discouraged. Thousands of fanciers are situated as I am, already past the age limit as fixed by an indulgent Government, and considered past the prime for the stern necessities experienced in the fighting line, though we be willing, ready, and anxious to answer the roll call.

The Extent of Our Fancy.

Very few fanciers, I fear, realise the enormous extent and ramifications of our Fancy. Just tell a pal the Cage Bird Fancy is an asset of which John Bull is proud, and can ill afford to lose; and I expect he would wink his eye, remove his hat, and significantly touch his head upon a spot, and make certain pointed suggestions of your having got it badly, etc. But it is very true, as I will show you. £100,000 per annum is a very conservative estimate of the turnover in birdseed and other bird-foods consumed in the United Kingdom, for it must be remembered that about one householder in every three maintains a Canary or other cage bird as a household pet; therefore, the value of bird seed in packets, altogether outside of the "Fancy," annually consumed is enormous, and perhaps in itself could easily be reckoned at the round figure I have mentioned.

This amount does not include the enormous and increasing exportation of bird seeds and foods to our colonies and other countries. Then must be reckoned the cage-making industry, the turnover of which, especially if it is included cage fittings or furniture, is quite a handsome sum. Also must be included the wages of thousands of people who are engaged in divers ways in connection with the Fancy, and who are paid, and indeed must live upon the wages received in so doing. Look at the cash that our Fancy, during the show season, puts into circulation. The railway companies, of course, would say the carriage of thousands of birds to and from shows is hardly worth their bother, but don't you believe it, for again it is a handsome sum.

I could dwell for some time in this way, but rather would I ask you to fix your attention upon the fact that John Bull's turnover in the Fancy is surely not less than £250,000 per annum.

Fancy a cool quarter of a million sunk each year to a quiet, peaceful hobby, and in maintaining a ray of sunshine in one home in every three. How much of this do you intend John Bull to lose?

No thoughtful fancier can close his eyes to the fact that doings during the coming winter will be exceedingly quiet, and money tight; but please do not take too gloomy a view. The fancier not actively involved in the war can be relied upon to do his share of holding the Fancy together, and this may best be done by dismissing all thoughts of parting with his stock.

Not so easy of solution is the position of the average and younger breeders, who cannot drown the call of duty, or whose livelihood is already threatened. Then what of those who rely upon their surplus birds to keep them through various straggles, and there are many such? Already it seems their avenues of sale are closed, and hopes of a month ago are blasted.

A Demand we can fill.

Yes, this is the picture that partly fills the canvas with the brush handled by the Kaiser, but, please God, I can see something more than black and red, and I hasten to point out that with co-operation and patience a better future lies ahead for the Fancy and John Bull. No one will buy Canaries this coming winter say you. What? Do you not know of the lucrative trade Germany has built up of late years in the exportation of singing Canaries to every civilised part of the globe? Do you think her breeders bred such hosts if there was no outlet for them? Are the Germans in a position to supply the demand this year?

There will surely be an overseas demand. Is this not one of the grandest opportunities the Fancy ever had of supplying the world generally with an English-bred musical-box? If we capture this business it will mean a few thousands of pounds for John Bull. Remember after forwarding the birds, we shall forward cages, bird seed, and other necessities, and this will mean employment and prosperity.

Societies cancelling their shows, I fear, is inevitable here and there, but to disband and not regularly meet as of yore would be cowardly. Is a birdy pal and his stock at the first touch of adversity to become derelict? Is there nothing you can do, no helping hand to stay his downward course, or hold his stock of birds, which presently may be changed to bread? What if we cannot procure a hall to hold a meeting as usual? Has no one a backyard, a scullery, or washhouse.

The "Order of the Push" at Abertillery.

SIR.—In reply to "Justice" I say to begin with he is not very manly, or he would come out of the bag and let me know who he is. One has to be careful whom he is corresponding with in these days of strife. He has, I may add, a very powerful appreciation of the capabilities of the officials. His remarks that they know their work better than those who are writing against them are questionable, and his statement about my having fair play in the meetings is untrue. He admits he has attended the meetings, therefore I consider he is acting on behalf of the officials. His statement that my being Secretary would put things right was meant and taken for a sneer. One to you, Mr. "Justice," until we meet.

A. E. MOULE.

Novice Classes Wanted in the Liverpool District.

SIR.—I notice with some satisfaction the comments of Mr. G. Rawsthorne in last week's issue of CAGE BIRDS re the need for classes in unflighted birds for novices at the Liverpool O.S. shows. I fully endorse his remarks, but I would like to go further and say what to my mind would be even more satisfactory in these classes. Instead of paying a fixed prize-money award, pay on the sliding scale; prize-money down to the eighth bird in each class. Deduct 3d. per bird in each class for working expenses, which is quite sufficient on a well-managed show, run by practical fanciers. We should a parlour, or drawing room, or stable, or somewhere in which a dozen or two determined fanciers can meet to help rescue a pal?

Do not let us have any more of this "meetings postponed indefinitely." Again, do not part with your stocks too easily, every songster to spare will be required; every one, remember, is likely to be a singing advertisement for the old country. Have the goods ready, good honest goods, and let us discuss how our stocks may be cared for, and how we can best get the grip of lucrative business, once held in the mailed fist of the Kaiser.

It is indeed unfortunate that the long expected and patiently-waited-for drop in values of Canary seed is not likely to materialise. From Morocco we have had during the past three or four weeks a few hundred bags of new crop Canary seed; but arriving to a practically bare cupboard it has not gone round very far, Spain is practically the only source of supply at present, and if we secure her whole crop, it is a mere bagatelle in the world's needs, and being the best, of course, it is dearest. Turkey has a splendid crop, all harvested, and much ready for shipment, and shillings cheaper than Moroccan or Spanish, but the prospect of our getting any supplies is poor.

Items to Press into Service.

If she becomes embroiled I expect it will be good bye to our Turkish seed, leaving only the Argentine to cope with the shortage, which she cannot do before January next. Possibly we may get a small supply of Dutch, but the chances may be slender. Our paper CAGE BIRDS is already making valuable and economical suggestions in the management of feeding, and it behoves every breeder, rich or poor, to husband his seeds. Fortunately, with the winter shortly due, such items as crushed oats, Quaker or rolled oats, or oatmeal, even flaked maize, stale bread soaked in milk, and dozens of other items can be pressed into service at more economical a price than Canary seed.

Fanciers also should not forget the threshings or screenings. A sack or two may be secured fairly easily and cheaply, in fact ever so much can be done to hold the Fancy together, but not by disbanding ourselves and stocks. Hold meetings more often if possible, tell each other how you are trying to manage. In the event of a pal becoming a fighter, don't pass his cherished stock to the world for a mere song; rather divide them amongst yourselves, maybe only a couple or so for each to look after, and what better welcome back than proof of having stood by a pal?

We must awake to the fact that we have one of the finest hobbies in the world for working good and no evil, a hobby which should bind us in a common bond of brotherhood.

Now for suggestions to hold us together. What about a fund to help needy fanciers? If we cannot hold our annual show let us turn the cash we have to the best account. If some societies have little, well, spend some energy in trying to make more. If a cwt. of seed can be bought cheaper than in pecks, and it generally can, then hold your meetings, put your cash together and get the cwt. All this will help to wallop the German monster, and if, like myself, you are too old to march with the musket, remember we are not too old to fight silently and unseen.

E. W. ALLSOPP.

then see what sort of youngsters there are about; it would also be doing good to old breeders who are champions, by selling the novices some young show birds. Rumours are abroad about cancelling a lot of shows on account of the war. This is absolutely unnecessary. I would suggest to show committees to adopt the following plan, namely, pay all prize-money on the sliding scale. Keep down the expenses of showrooms, stationery accounts, etc.; judges' fees for this year should be reduced. Advertise in CAGE BIRDS your show and let all exhibitors apply for schedules and entry forms.

What is the Most General Sliding Scale?

SIR.—In reply to "Novice's" question, the most general sliding scale is, I believe, that in which the entry fees in each class are divided into 6 portions, the first prize winner taking 3 portions, second 2 portions, and third 1 portion. Thus, supposing the show committee in drawing up rules say "The entry fee shall be 2s. for the first entry and 1s. for each entry afterwards." The first shilling on each entry form is deducted to pay for the expenses of the show; 9 entries would give 9s. prize money, which would be divided into 4s. 6d. 1st prize, 3s. 2nd, and 1s. 6d. 3rd; 15 entries would give 7s. 6d. 1st prize, 5s. 2nd, 2s. 6d. 3rd; 8 entries, 4s. 1st prize, 2s. 8d. 2nd, 1s. 4d. 3rd, and so on throughout the show.

A Young Sparrow Makes Himself at Home.

SIR.—The House Sparrow as a rule is not disposed to be very intimate in its friendship with human beings, hence I thought the following, sent by "R. K. C." to the "Scotsman," would interest your readers also. He says: "About a fortnight ago a young Sparrow flew in at our kitchen window (which is on the top flat of a tenement in town) and perched on the outside of a Canary's cage which was hanging in the window. He was very faint, and eagerly took from our hands both food and water. He became quite friendly, hopping and flying about the room and in and out of the window all day. We noticed that he had the use of only one leg, the other being shrivelled and powerless. He finally went off for the night, leaving us wondering if we had seen the last of him. He was, however, at the window next morning, and has been back regularly since. There are flower boxes outside the window, and he sometimes alights on them, first of all to reconnoitre, and then hops in past the flowers on to the kitchen sink. At other times he flies right in at the window, and at once makes himself at home, taking bread-crumbs from our hands at meal times, or making straight for a dish of canary-seed which has been placed handy for him. Until lately he would not go to a cup of water and take a drink for himself. The cup had always to be presented to him. But within the last few days he has taken both a drink and a bath for himself. He seemed to enjoy the latter immensely. It was very hot one morning, and he bathed and dried himself in the sun alternately every little while. Yesterday we were surprised to notice that he had lost the claws from his crippled leg, and had only a stump left. The loss did not seem to affect him."

JAS. M'WATT.

Is the Novice Coddled Over-much?

SIR.—Mr. J. Locke is really a bit of "young stuff." I congratulate him not only for having survived the nipping effects of what I have written, but for his series of pertinent and sensible questions, which surely betray a desire to at once get down to bed-rock. If every beginner paused and enquired what constituted a successful breeder's stock, and how long it took to breed a really outstanding specimen, we should not have so many in our midst to-day who are neither use nor ornament to the Fancy; for so long as they are under the impression that only a few birds and cages are necessary, and that the services of "Mary Ann" can be requisitioned upon frequent occasion, so long will their efforts result in certain failure.

As to how, and from whom, I have purchased stock, I may say that whenever I have needed new blood (it must of necessity be fairly frequent in a limited stud of six or seven pairs, and not being a whole-bogger for inbreeding) I have secured it in divers ways, though always honestly. My sheet anchor is perhaps local purchases, for then I know something of the breeding of the particular bird I require, and other truly essential features. In this way I have drawn upon both novice and champion stock, though in the case of the former my purchases have been mainly confined to a useful bird or so which was originally bred in the room of another and more successful breeder, of whose stock I already had some knowledge, and perhaps myself possessed some of the same blood. It is because of this that I find it impossible to impartially direct credit where it is due, as it must be obvious that though of late years my stock consists mainly of birds of my own breeding, yet nevertheless in them is blood drawn from various quarters, and where the good work of the other breeders ends (if it really does) and where my own good, bad, or indifferent work commences I cannot say, particularly as I have in mind the peculiar and subtle law of reversion. Certain it is that I realise the real help I have enjoyed at others' hands. £3 3s. is the highest figure I have ever paid for a Plainhead; £3 my highest for a pair; also I have never purchased a Plainhead for show purposes nor ever been in the first three at a leading all-England show with a purchased Plainhead.

"Welsh Queen" represented three seasons' work on the maternal side, four on the paternal, counting from time of introduction of new blood, and if you divide twelve guineas by three and a-half, it is not much per annum if you want to look at these things in a mercenary manner, which I don't. When I commenced in the Fancy I plodded for four seasons before I produced a youngster fit to look out of a show cage, and win at Plymouth. To-day if some of the novices do not produce an eye-opener the first season they spend the next at the picture palace, or pouring out invective upon those who do not deserve it.

To maintain size in your stock, secure a cock which is not only of massive build and heavy in bone, but also consistently bred from such stock. The farther he is removed from Crestbred or copy blood the better, for both crosses destroy the true Plainhead character and temperament. When you have such a bird—well, stick to him, for I candidly confess though there be many other pebbles upon the beach, neither love nor money can always secure this stamp of cock.

In conclusion, I trust my correspondent will fully realise that a fair measure of success does not necessarily come through the avenue of a deep pocket, a luxury consistently denied me—in fact for some time during my existence I was even denied a pocket at all, though I am not blaming anybody for it!

E. W. ALLSOPP.

How Did Birds Originate?

SIR.—Mr. Savage is emphatic in his denial that some of the moths have feathers for a covering. My acquaintance with the science of entomology doesn't warrant my posing as an authority. All I can say is that recently I caught one of the more uncommon moths, and I took it to a naturalist friend who has made a lifelong study of entomology, and he named it, and explained that its covering was a kind of feather. So, when scientists disagree, who's to referee? Mr. Savage says that man has not lived long enough for the anatomical change to have taken place. That is the answer that all evolutionists give when cornered. They know that nobody can disprove that statement. All the same, it is a very weak argument. How does he know that animals do not suffer from indigestion? And what makes him say that few humans are immune from the complaint? My contact with my fellow men, and my appraising of the sturdy forms and healthy visages of the coming generation impresses me with the opinion that not more than ten per cent. of our population suffer from indigestion. School clinics, district nurses, the inclusion of gymnastics and other sports into our educational system will do away with the necessity of an anatomical alteration in the human frame. Now, sir, I am aware that we are rambling from the subject; but I would like to claim your indulgence while I ask Mr. Savage a few questions on evolution. We are told that the horse was once an aquatic animal with cloven hoofs. Will Mr. Savage tell me what his theories are in regard to the horse, how it has evolved itself into the glorious animal of to-day, and why the hoof has become the solid substance it is now?

T. JOHNSON.

[We are glad that our correspondent realises that in asking questions as to the evolution of the horse he is getting outside of the scope of such a journal as CAGE BIRDS. We have no doubt that Mr. Savage could answer the questions, but we ask him mercifully to refrain from doing so.—Editor.]

THE MOULTING AND EXHIBITING OF MULES AND HYBRIDS.

By E. COLLINS (Barnstaple).

ONE'S brain does not work on birdy lines just now. Our thoughts are of the war and its awful possibilities, and it is difficult to concentrate them upon any other subject. I can think of no other occasion when I have found it so difficult to bring my mind to bear upon the subject in hand.

A short time ago it was my privilege to write a series of articles on the Fascinating Pursuit of Mule and Hybrid Breeding, and feeling that such a series is not complete without a chapter on the Moulting, Training, and Exhibiting of these birds, I once more take up my pen to add a few notes on these last stages, as it were, in the development of the young mule or hybrid, for such birds cannot be considered to have reached maturity until the first moult is completed, nor can they be placed before the judges in these days of keen competition with much hope of success unless they are steady, well-trained, and shown to the very best advantage.

A Long Career Likely.

Having successfully reared our mules or hybrids, there is yet much to be done before the young birds are ready for the show bench. The approach of the moulting season is a very critical period in the life of all cage birds, and much depends upon how the young birds are steered through their first moult. If they moult out into strong and healthy specimens, they are likely, in an ordinary way, to live through several show seasons, provided they are not over shown. I have in my birdroom at the present time two hybrids which are now passing through their ninth moult, and which have won nearly a hundred prizes, yet both are in the best of health, and I am looking forward to yet another successful season with them.

See that your birds get a good supply of sound, wholesome food, plenty of exercise, and free use of the bath, and keep your cages scrupulously clean and free from red mite. Attention to these matters will make all the difference in the bird's health, and will probably considerably lengthen its days. The cages should be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected at the commencement of the moulting season, and should be overhauled at least once a week during the moult. The water-vessels should be rinsed out every day before giving ing a fresh supply, and during the hot weather fresh water should be given three or four times a day. The seed supplied should be of the finest quality, and should be sifted once a week regularly.

It is scarcely necessary for me to say that if any winning is to be done without mules and hybrids, they must be colour-fed. It is not my intention here to discuss the pros and cons of colour-feeding. There are many well-known cage-bird fanciers who are opposed to it, and have not hesitated to condemn the practice, while others maintain that no harmful effects result from the use of pepper, and that the birds are greatly improved by its aid. However, "Those who live in Rome must do as the Romans do," and if we are to exhibit our birds with any hope of success, we must resort to colour-feeding. The non-fed bird will stand a very poor chance against its more highly-coloured rivals.

The Unwisdom of Barring Pepper.

Many birdkeepers and cage bird societies have attempted to put colour-feeding out of court in various ways. But these fanciers forget that even though societies might make laws prohibiting the use of pepper as a colouring agent, many of our more experienced birdkeepers would be able to continue to colour-feed their birds, with discretion, of course, in such a manner that the judges would have great difficulty in distinguishing between the natural-coloured specimen, one which had been bred for colour, and the bird of poorer colour, but whose colour had been improved by the judicious use of pepper.

Especially would this be the case with British birds, mules and hybrids, and in my opinion it would be almost impossible in many cases to distinguish between the good natural-coloured bird and the colour-fed specimen. Under these circumstances, even though I would be glad to dispense with the use of pepper, I think it would be unwise to make any rules to prohibit its use as a colouring agent.

Colour-feeding then must form part of the scheme in the production of the exhibition hybrid. Whether we agree with it or not does not matter. The fact remains that we must either colour feed our birds or take a back seat.

When procuring your colour-food get it direct from a reliable dealer, and use only pepper of the finest quality. To every

A GREEN CANARY OF NORWICH TYPE.

This very typical specimen has done well for its owner, Mr. F. Handley, of Liverpool, winding up the season by securing second prize at the Crystal Palace Show.

4lbs. of tasteless pepper add 1/2 lb. of hot Natal and 1/2 lb. of castor sugar. This should be thoroughly mixed and put into tins ready for use, and kept closed. Many breeders add a certain quantity of olive oil to the pepper, but I think that the peppers as supplied by most dealers contain quite sufficient quantities of oil.

Preparing and Giving Colour-food.

When preparing the colour-food for my Mules and Hybrids I add one teaspoonful of pepper to three or four teaspoonfuls of egg-food, supplying one teaspoonful of this mixture to each bird. Do not commence at this strength, but begin with a very small proportion of pepper and gradually increase the amount till the full strength has been reached.

Do not wait until your birds begin to drop their feathers before commencing to colour-feed them. All old birds should be put on to the food by the end of June, so as to get it well into the system before the moult commences, while all young birds should be started when they are about seven or eight weeks old. The colour-food should be given regularly, and it is important that the amount supplied each day shall be eaten up, otherwise your birds will not moult out a good even colour.

You will find it necessary in some cases to remove the seed boxes until the birds have finished their soft food. My own plan is to remove the seed vessels at night, and replace them on the following day when the birds have finished the colour-food.

Continue the colour-food until the birds are well through the moult, and then gradually decrease the amount and put back the seed vessels a little earlier each day, so as to avoid a sudden change of diet. Even after the birds have quite completed their moult it will be advisable to give your exhibition birds a little colour-food once or twice a week during the show season, as they are apt to lose feathers from various causes, especially when travelling and at the shows.

HOW TO CHEAPEN THE FOOD BILL.

Hints that may be useful to Bird-keepers during the present War crisis

By G. E. WESTON.

ANOTHER useful item of live-food which many keepers of soft-billed birds can obtain with very little effort, and practically for the asking, is the cockroach ("black-beetle"). These creatures are usually very plentiful in bakehouses, and are easily caught in traps set for the purpose at a few pence by ironmongers, etc. I kept my supply in tins, amongst sacking.

Small black-beetles were always "smashed up" and eaten with gusto by most of my Wagtails, Tits, Robins, Nightingales, Redstarts, Skylarks, etc.; while such birds as Jays, Magpies, Thrushes, and Black-birds simply gloat over them, and the bigger the better from their point of view. I have also found Woodpeckers, Hoopoes, and Golden Orioles partial to a meaty black-beetle, to say nothing of various foreign species, such as Cardinals, Blue Jays, etc.

A Killing Wrestler!

Black-beetles with my birds have always proved safe and good food items, and I should never hesitate to supply them (using discretion, for obvious reasons, in the matter of the relative size of bird and beetle) to all likely species, whether British or Foreign. To see a tame "Jenny" Wren having a catch-as-catch-can match with a black-beetle, the cage floor being the arena, is one of the most joyous and mirth-provoking sights imaginable, especially when he gets a "toe-hold" and treats his opponent to such a series of falls as must surely violate every known rule of wrestling!

The Robin, however, is an easy first at this business; he treats his opponent to the "flying mare" in most skilful fashion, then bangs him forcefully to the ground, not, I regret to say, always on his back, according to rule, but as likely as not on his belly! Still, maybe this doesn't matter, for the cockroach is then generally in such a condition that the subsequent proceedings interest him no more.

Owners of Thrushes should remember that they are very fond of common garden snails, pests that are only too plentiful this season in my own neighbourhood. Put a piece of stone, or a portion of a brick in the cage for the bird to smash the shells on.

A correspondent remarks that I did not mention my own method of colour-feeding and how I mixed my colour-food. I did not intend to touch on the latter topic (just now, at any-rate) as the method of using the food is so well understood now-a-days; directions are issued by all who sell colour-food, and the general process is described in all books dealing with Canary breeding, frequently, too, in the pages of CAGE BIRDS.

To administer the food I use a plain cake almost exactly like the madeira cake sold by confectioners. Any house-wife can bake one at home. In the ingredients, however, I use a little extra fat, i.e., so that it is, when baked, a little more fatty in character than the average madeira cake. If one is in the habit of adding oil to the pepper, this extra fat should be omitted. This cake is crumbled up and the colour-food well incorporated with it. I arrange to have made at one week-end sufficient to last me until the following week-end, and I keep the "mixed food" in one of the glazed earthenware jars which all general-stores stock at a low price.

A Real Time-Saver.

This method is not so cheap a one as that which I detailed the other week, but it is much cheaper than where fresh eggs are used each day, and as a saver of time it would be difficult to beat. All one has to do is measure out the daily supply. There is no risk, either, of disaster to the birds owing to the food going bad. The pepper, too, gets thoroughly blended with every particle of cake. My birds come out a grand colour, as rich as I see anyone's on the show-bench.

This question of colour-feeding cheaply evidently interests many, judging by the letters I have had concerning it. An old-time friend of mine, Mr. Geo. Hobbs, of Northampton—he is one of our oldest fanciers, and I am pleased to say is well and hearty—writes to tell me that in the days when the birds exhibited by the late Mrs. Hobbs were carrying all before them (I well remember the wonderful Blackbird which was one of the team) they had mixed into their food a lot of hard, stale crusts, which had been soaked in water.

Mr. Hobbs states that he got the idea of using the stale bread from a very old book on bird-keeping, which came into his own hands as many as 40 years ago. The author wrote that this "tip" was "worth a guinea" to anyone keeping birds. And Mr. Hobbs tells me that to him he certainly considers it has been very full value for a guinea. The soaked bread, of course, is left in as friable (i.e., not pasty) a state as possible.

Potato When Colour-Feeding.

As regards colour-feeding, Mr. Hobbs is this year trying mixing the pepper with cold boiled potato a day old. He passes the potato through a fine sieve and mixes in the pepper, then passes the whole through the sieve once more. He says that his birds are eating this freely, appear to be doing well on it, and are coming out a grand colour. The final result he kindly promises to communicate in due course. It is, anyway, another method that leaves hard-boiled egg and biscuit far in the rear in the important matter of cheapness.

With regard to economy in seeds, the fancier should on no account omit to profit by the help Dame Nature will afford him if he is in a position to gather from her plentiful store of wild seeds. The only expense she will put upon him is the expenditure of spare time in the gathering; though some, maybe, will be called upon to disburse a few coppers in tram, etc., fares, getting to the country lanes. For some of the most useful wild-seeds it is rarely necessary to travel far. Thistle and hard-heads are common enough, while shepherd's purse is with us everywhere, and such items as groundsel, chickweed, dock, and the like are very plentiful. These are a few of the things which at this time of the year should help to lighten the seed-bill of every bird-keeper.

Questions and Answers.

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS

- (1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and conclude with either the correct name or a pseudonym.
- (2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query.
- (3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.
- (4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.
- (5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated on the left-hand corner of the query.
- (6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest.
- (7)—If an answer by post is desired from our specialists, a postal order for sixpence must accompany any query relating to sickness of birds, or a shilling in ordinary enquiries, with a stamped and addressed envelope in either case. Dead birds must not be sent to the office (see Post-mortems).
- (8)—All who desire letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence. All the fees received from this source will be handed over in full to the "Referee's" Poor Children's Fund (London).
- (9)—All queries must be addressed to the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Postcards are not admissible.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must, of course, be sent to the Editor.

Canaries.—Claude St. John, British Birds, Mules, and Hybrids.—H. Norman, Foreign Birds.—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Wild Bird Life.—H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc., of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Borders, Scotch, or any other variety of Canary, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his questions for answer to some leading specialist on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

MAKES NOISE IN THROAT. (A. Pink).—You ought to have mentioned what treatment you have been giving, or sent a cutting of previous reply, as I cannot decide from your letter which reply you refer to. Try what a month of the following treatment will do for the bird, and if not quite successful write again and repeat full particulars. Give a staple diet of plain canary seed only. Every second day give separately half a teaspoonful of summer rape, and on the alternate days a morsel of bread and milk, no larger than a hazel nut, with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and sprinkled with maw seed. Give a little green food daily. Limit the diet to this. In the drinking-water add five drops each of glycerine, tincture of lobelia, ipecacuanha wine, and sweet spirits of nitre ABERTILLERY C.B.S.

Meeting, Aug. 22, Prince of Wales' Hotel, Mr. Probert presiding. A vote of sympathy was passed to Mr. Bibbings, who had the misfortune of losing his birds. He had left the window open about 3 inches at the top, as usual, for ventilation, and his own cat squeezed her way in at the window, and killed every bird except one old hen. Mr. Bibbings is a raw novice, and he had a few good young Yorkshires, which he thought to exhibit after the moult. The society will consider at the next meeting what course they will take to help Mr. Bibbings. Messrs. W. Saunders and A. Hyde were elected members. The secretary was instructed to forward photographs to the Editor of CAGE BIRDS for reproduction. Anyone wishing to join the society can have particulars from H. H. Mortimer, Hon. every second day for a week, then omit it for a week, and give it again for another week. Report result at the end of the month's treatment.

MAKES PECULIAR NOISE (W. G. T.).—I do not think there is anything seriously wrong with the bird. It is probably troubled only with a little ennui, such as many birds show signs of at this season, when the moult is in progress. See that it is protected from direct cold draughts, extremes of heat and cold, and do not expose it to the fumes of burning lights in the evenings. You may give a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar every second day for a week or so, and on the alternate days add to the drinking water 20 drops of whiskey, and five each of oxymel of squills and ipecacuanha wine, and two of eucalyptus oil, and shaken well together.

A TRIPLET (A. R.).—(1) I should say that a young Canary that was very woezy at 14 weeks old had either been very improperly treated, or had inherited the disease from tainted forbears, and is not likely to be of much service for anything. Keep the cages very clean, avoid extremes of heat and cold, or draughts, and do not expose the birds to the fumes of burning lights in the evenings. In addition to the staple seed diet give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it every third day, and on the intervening days give first a pinch of maw seed and a morsel of banana, and next a spray of green food, and add to the drinking water five drops each of oxymel of squills, tincture of lobelia, ipecacuanha wine, and spirit of sweet nitre. Continue this for a fortnight or so. (2) It is not correct that all young birds moult from eight to twelve weeks old. Some may begin even younger, and others will be older than the latter age before they begin. Your birds are doubtless moulting very gradually, and will be all right, although they will take longer over it. They may, however, start away more rapidly at any time now. (3) Young birds that are singing now may reasonably be supposed to be cocks, but this cannot by any means be taken as an infallible sign. It is quite possible for some of the birds that are now making quite brave attempts at singing to turn out to be hens, and, on the other hand, there are many cocks that have not yet made any serious efforts at singing.

DAMAGED BEAKS (W. R. McG.).—As both the birds are affected in the same manner, I would advise you to look carefully into the wire-holes through which the birds get their food and water, and also examine the edges of the food and water vessels, to see if there is any jagged end of wire, or rough edge of the vessels, which is likely to cause injury by friction or otherwise, and, if so, remove this cause, and the effect will soon disappear. If there is no such likely cause, paint the sore areas once with a small feather dipped in Friar's Balsam, and after this anoint them about every second day with Lanocyllin ointment for a week or two until they are well on the road to a healthy condition. Add a pinch of Epsom salts to the water for two or three days, and give a fairly liberal supply of green-food to keep the bowels rather free for a week or two.

TROUBLE WITH BEETLES (J. Young).—If your house is infested with beetles to such an extent that they invade the cages in any number, the only rational plan is to exterminate them from the house as far as possible. If not actually fraught with fatal results, and it may easily have this effect, their presence will be most detrimental, and give rise to frequent panics and other undesirable results. You should be careful to leave no scraps of waste food of any description about the house, and keep a "Demon" beetle trap or two set regularly every night, baited with a little stale beer, and transfer the contents each morning to a vessel of boiling water. If you carry on this warfare consistently, you will gain the upper hand in the end, and bring them to the point of harmlessness, if not absolute extinction. The beetles thus captured and destroyed would form a valuable item of food for the larger soft-billed birds you or any fancier friend might keep. If the stock is not reduced by some such means as this, I see no practical way of making the cages proof against their inroads other than keeping them on a rack which stands about an inch away from the wall, has no direct contact with the ceiling, and with the bottom tier of cages raised about twelve or eighteen inches from the floor, and the legs protected with bands of thin zinc or tin sheets tacked closely all round each leg of the staging.

YOUNG DYING, AND MOULT (M. E. J.).—(1) Sorry, but without some particulars about your general treatment, and the condition of the birds, and the age at which the young died, I cannot hazard a guess at the cause of the young dying. You may, however, be quite assured that it was not caused by the young being kept in the same room as the parents, nor to the cock neglecting the hen. The most probable cause is that the hen did not attend to the young properly after rearing the young from the second round, but it may also be that your feeding was largely, if not solely, the cause. Your best plan is to get a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," post free, for 7d., from this office, and be guided by the instructions in its pages for the next season. (2) You do not say whether you wish to colour feed them or not, but I assume not. In that case give a staple diet of plain canary seed, and in addition give separately every second day a half teaspoonful of summer rape and a morsel of banana, and on the alternate days a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, black rape, teazel and broken groats, and a spray of green-food. Twice a week give each bird a small teaspoonful of egg food, or an equivalent quantity of bread and milk sprinkled with maw seed. When the new quills begin to appear on the head and neck add 20 drops of chemical food to the water three times a week for two or three weeks. Nothing else should be necessary. (3) As a rule, Canaries do not sing whilst they are moulting, but there are exceptions. The best method of getting the young cocks on song is to let them hear a good free-singing cock for a few weeks when the moult is drawing to a close; this will induce them to commence as soon as the effects of the moult have passed off.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

TROUBLE WITH LINNET (E.M.T.).—I should say your young Linnet has had an accident at some time and injured its foot. You cannot do better than treat it in the way you are doing, and when you are handling the bird massage the toes, for a few minutes, so as to keep them pliable. I would also advise you to give him several perches, each one of different thickness, the smallest about the size of a lead pencil. Give an aperient occasionally, such as a teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in three tablespoonfuls of water. Keep the cage floor and perches perfectly clean.

MOULTING A LARK (W. Cawson).—I quite agree with you that you should try to get your bird to moult this autumn; in fact, I think it absolutely necessary for him to do so. I have known birds to miss one moult and to all appearance be none the worse for it, but to miss the second one is usually fatal. Give it a change of temperature and extra exercise; if this fails gradually cover the cage with a thin cloth until the bird is almost in darkness, this, as a rule, throws him into a moult; to assist him put a shred or two of Meadow Saffron and 15 drops of whisky or rum in his drinking water. Do not be impatient, try the first remedy thoroughly, and if we should happen to experience a change of weather this will no doubt help to effect the desired result. If you have a small aviary you can turn him into I think you will find it "do the trick." I have found this to be one of the best ways to moult the Woodlark, which is a notoriously bad moulter in captivity; the extra exercise seems to work wonders. When you have managed to get him to commence his moult do not move him; keep him under the same conditions until he has finished. Let his food be particularly good and nourishing, and give him all the insect life you can collect.

TROUBLE WITH GREENFINCH (Mrs. M. King).—Greenfinches as a rule are particularly strong and healthy birds, and if treated on rational lines live for years in captivity without any serious ailments. I think you are treating your bird too liberally, and in addition you are giving no green food. I have no doubt that if you were to handle him you would find he is very fat. Make up the following mixture, 2 parts canary, 1 each rape and teazel. This will be his staple food. Give half a dozen sound sunflower seeds every other day, or if you can get some safflower seeds he may have same quantity every day. Collect fresh wild food daily, seeding grass, chickweed, groundsel, shepherd's purse, plantain, etc.; there are plenty about just now and these are much better than dry hard seeds. Occasionally soak a little teazel and rape and give just a cube of bread soaked in hot milk. Discontinue the cough mixture for a few days, but if you find his breathing troublesome you had better give it on alternate days. He should have a good big cage and be allowed to bathe on all suitable occasions.

GOLDFINCH CANARY WITH DEFORMED FOOT (I. Keevil).—If I understand your letter rightly your bird has practically lost the use of one of its toes, and I also presume it is the hind one. To remedy this is not a very difficult matter; what you must do is to fasten it back to the leg and keep it there for a few days when you will probably find it has come back into place. Procure a strip of court plaster and after damping it bind it round the leg and hind toe, and hold the bird in the hand until it is quite dry. When you wish to remove it all you have to do is to soak it in warm water. Your perches should be on the small side, so that the bird can easily grip them. (2) It is impossible for me to tell you the value of your bird without seeing it. If it is a small, badly-shaped specimen it would only be worth the price of a songster, but a large shapely bird of good colour may be worth several pounds. I would advise you not to part with it until you have shown it to someone able to give you some idea of its proper value. Hybrids as a rule grow considerably after the first moult, and it may therefore pay you to keep him for another year.

MORE QUESTIONS (Inquisitive).—The bath is good for all birds and as a rule they are the best judges about when to take it, but in captivity it is as well to limit it to fine days, and to give it early in the morning and remove it at mid-day, whether they have made use of it or not. (2) Hybrids bred from say cock Bullfinch and hen Greenfinch would not be of more value than those bred in the usual way, that is, cock Greenfinch and hen Bullfinch. A good specimen of this cross or Goldie Bullie is as handsome as one could wish, and if you bred birds from the cock Bullie and placed them beside these specimens I am doubtful if even experts would know the difference. Anyway, there is no harm in your trying to produce them from the Bullfinch cock. (3) The Chaffinch-Bullfinch has not been produced, but the Greenfinch-Bullfinch and Linnets-Bullfinch are exhibited yearly. (4) The Greenfinch-Chaffinch is the latest addition to the list of Hybrids, so therefore we must presume it is the most difficult, but as all are difficult it would be as well to call it the most rare. Of the Canary crosses the Bullfinch Canary is the most troublesome to get; failure from pairs put together to produce these handsome birds is quite common.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

WHAT IS IT? (A.H.E.).—Your description is very vague, and in the absence of locality it came from, it is impossible to make any definite pronouncement as to its species; it is very probably a young bird, and if so will alter materially in its colouration during the next twelve months. It appears to me, however, that it is either a young or a female Ring-necked Parakeet. I am sorry, but unless you can give me more details I cannot be more definite.

AILING GREY (H. Van. D.).—Of course if the bird does not eat it can't recover, and you can't do much to alleviate the trouble till it is eating again. Full as your details are, it is difficult definitely to diagnose the trouble, but it is evident that the mouth or throat is affected, and an examination should be made as soon as the bird will permit it. In the same way as you got the bird to take the castor-oil, give a little honey and borax twice daily so long as you find the mouth or throat furled or slimy. Till the bowels have been thoroughly moved, the drinking-water should consist of equal parts of water and Dunneford's Magnesia; follow this by a course of phosphates, half a teaspoonful of syrup of phosphates to the ounce of water. Offer milk-sop, fairly stiff, till you see the bird taking its food again; put in the sop one-third of a teaspoonful of cod liver oil emulsion. As soon as the bird is taking its ordinary diet again the milk sop can be gradually discontinued. The ordinary diet should consist of seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts, biscuits, stale crusts, and of course, cuttlebone, grit, and water. Shall be pleased to hear how the bird progresses.

AVIARY QUERIES (H. A.).—(1) As I read your plan, the area covered by A. B. J. H. is to consist entirely of solid walls and a covered roof, save for lighting arrangement. Both the sleeping compartment and the covered flight must be made as light as a living room, or the birds will not use them, and all glass must be covered with wire on the inside. B. C. E. G. to be wire netting stretched on light wood framing, roof also of this, all to consist of wire-netting; but from B. to K. all round this part of the aviary the first 18 inches above ground should be match boarding, with wire-netting above this and over the roof; this protection is necessitated by the N.W. aspect. (2) The most effective treatment for all exterior wood-work (walls of shelter and covered flights and framing) is two coats of dark brown "solignum," picking out doors and windows in pale sea-green. The interior of shelter and covered flight must not be stained with solignum, but distempered with Hall's washable distemper—pale sea-green. The staining and distemping should be done before wire is stretched on; the wire should be painted with Brunswick Black, or bicycle black varnish. (3 and 4 included in No. 2.) B. to K. ground area should be planted with enonymus, laurel, acubia, cypress, and such creepers as wild clematis, ivy and virginia creepers, and rambler roses, the space between the bushes to be grass and herbage.

BUDGERIGARS (L. A. W.).—I am assuming that you have double as many husks or other receptacles in aviary as you have pairs of birds; also that there are several seed hoppers so that all are not compelled to gather round one vessel. Accommodation being correct, it is difficult to account for such mishaps, other than the idiosyncrasies of individual pairs, aided and abetted by climatic conditions, and at the end of the season a sort of tiring off, and again possibly the presence of parasites in the cocoanut husks. During recent weather husks under a glass roof would be almost unbearable and quite sufficient to account for the trouble. I suggest the thorough ventilation of the apex of the glass gable, without draught of course, and whitewashing the glass during the summer months of the year. Also in the open part of flight a 12in. board being put all round the netting roof at right angles with the wood framing, and under this to hang several husks. During the summer months it is better to encourage the birds to nest in the open flight, but of course you must put something to throw rain off the top of husk.

GREY PARROT (Gun).—Paddy rice is obtainable from any of the large seed merchants advertising in our pages, but what you are giving will suffice. I have carefully read your details, and for the present you had better continue on the lines of our previous reply (I suggested possible cause). As soon as weather is more settled, open-air treatment will do more for it than anything else, but do not subject it to chill winds while it is out of condition. Give it some cod liver oil, ten to twenty drops, soaked into a piece of bread, biscuit, or plain cake, whichever the bird will take, daily for a time. The breast bone can always be felt, but when a bird is emaciated then it appears to have a knife-edge and almost to be cutting its way through, and the body, instead of being rounded, is more of the shape of a letter V. Instead of the old cane waste-paper basket, put a stoutish semi-rotten branch in one corner for him to wittle at and climb about on. Exercise outside his cage is good for him, and the attacks should get less and less in severity and gradually cease. Shall be pleased to hear how the bird progresses.

WHAT BIRD? (A. W.F.).—Your bird is either the Green Singing Finch or the St. Helena Seed-eater, very similar in plumage, but the latter is much the larger of the two, and also the yellows in its plumage a little more intense than those of the former. If you are acquainted with the G. Singing Finch, and know its size, and your bird is larger, then you'll be safe in assuming yours is a St. Helena Seed-eater; both are Ferinus and crosses from both species have been reared with the domestic Canary, and you should ultimately succeed.

WILL THEY BREED? (Canadian).—Bib Finches have bred on more than one occasion in a cage, and there is no reason why they should not breed with you. Give them a cage to themselves, not smaller than a Canary double-breeder with all the partitions removed. Put a rush nest at each end of the cage, and fix a twiggy branch in front of them. A Canary nest-bag will answer for nesting material. Diet: canary and white millet seeds, an occasional millet spray, green food, grit, cuttlebone, and water for drinking and bathing. As regards Grey Java Sparrows, these have bred in a cage, and the treatment is similar to above, but even in an aviary the Grey is a shy breeder, but the White variety is much more free.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. (d.); analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post: it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

MRS. ROBERTS.—It is a pity you did not explain the circumstances when you first wrote me; it would have saved time and trouble. The bird died as the result of bowel trouble. You should read carefully the rules as laid down in CAGE BIRDS.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

RULES.

- 1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.
- 2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.
- 3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.
- 4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

Anything & Everything

Absolutely everything required by catchers in stock, and all guaranteed brand new goods; send stamp for full printed list, which also gives hints on net making. Practically every professional catcher in the Kingdom uses my articles, and I guarantee every purchaser fullest satisfaction or I return his money in full. During the term of the war many people will probably have spare time, to what better use can they put it than to have some real good sport in bird catching, and at same time augment their income by disposing of their surplus catches, but to insure this they must have serviceable articles made by a man who thoroughly understands what is required for successful catching. Every article sent out by me is guaranteed to have been properly tested and exactly same quality as supplied to my own catchers. (1740)

OBITUARY.

Mr. Fletcher Nicholson.

It is with the deepest sorrow, writes Mr. J. Nicholson, of Maryport, that I have to inform you of the death of our eldest brother, Fletcher Nicholson, on Aug. 27, after a long illness and much suffering from the dreadful disease cancer; aged 57 years. He had been a very keen naturalist and fancier all his life, and at the time of his death had a nice stock of Yorkshires, in which he took keen interest right up to his death. Although he had not been exhibiting for a good many years, many of your readers will remember the firm of Nicholson Bros., Flimby. He leaves a widow, two sons, and four daughters, also five brothers and two sisters, to mourn his loss.

We hear that the following societies have decided to cancel their open shows: East Perthshire O.A., Frome F.A., Morpeth C.B.S., while those of the following have been postponed indefinitely: Brighton and Hove C.B.A., Markinch P.P. and C.B.S. It is gratifying to be able to gather from the small number of notices of abandonment that the large majority of societies are endeavouring to hold their shows as arranged. Many societies are coming to a decision at their next meeting, as will be seen from our Club Notices column, and it is hoped that these meetings will be largely attended so that the question of abandonment or non-abandonment may have full consideration.

A Well-known Cage Bird Judge to the Front.

Owing to having been called up with the Territorial Force I shall be unable to attend to judging engagements, and shall have to cancel same. Secretaries might write me to following address: Sergt. J. W. Bruce, No. 3 Com., 5th K.O.S.B., Tillicoultry, Clackmannanshire.

Six Additions to Scottish Avifauna.

The "Report on Scottish Ornithology in 1913" records the fact that during 1913 several new birds were added to the Scottish list, "one of them being also new to the European avifauna," while in addition a great many uncommon visitors were recorded. The additions to the Scottish birds comprise the Dusky Willow Warbler, Phylloscopus fuscatus, found in Aukerry (the first recorded appearance in any part of Europe); the lesser Grey Shrike, Lanius minor, procured on Fair Isle; the melodious Warbler, Hippolais polygotta; the Indian Stonechat, Saxicola torquata Indica; the Gull-billed Tern, Sterna nilotica; and the Scandinavian Lesser Black-backed Gull, Larus fuscus fuscus.

CANARIES FOR THE HOSPITALS.

IN our issues of Aug. 22 and Aug. 29 appeared a suggestion to our readers that they might individually and with little cost help to ameliorate the condition of the brave soldiers who would be sent back wounded from the war. Time alone will show the number of our heroic defenders who will be incapacitated; they are already being brought back to the land which they left in high spirit only a week or so ago, and even if the war into which we have been forced should continue but for a little while, the first batch of sufferers will inevitably be supplemented by hundreds of their comrades.

With the true spirit of British soldiers, the wounded men make light of their injuries, and the demeanour of those who have not been hurt beyond the power of demonstration would suggest rather that they were returning from a picnic rather than from a bloody struggle against overpowering numbers. Nevertheless, into hospital they have to go, and the hopes of many of them that they may have another bout with the enemy will be long of fulfilment. In the meantime, quite apart from their sufferings, they have to experience the monotony of a sick bed, and this monotony would be materially lessened by the presence in the ward of a singing Canary. Many of our "Tommies" are bird fanciers, and the song of one of their favourites would make them forget their sufferings, while there are few indeed whose tedium would not be relieved by the music of the birds.

We knew we should not make the appeal in vain, and the response has been fully met our expectations. Lady readers, as might have been anticipated, are conspicuous among the senders of promises, and their coupons are in many cases accompanied by sympathetic letters.

Generous as the response has been, there still remain many of our readers who have not yet signified their intention of helping to minimise the tedium of the hospital ward to our heroes who have been laid low in an heroic struggle, and we reprint the coupon for their signature.

Canaries for the Hospitals

I am willing, if called on any time during the next twelve months, to supply free of cost one singing cock Canary and small travelling cage, to be presented as a gift to any Hospital or Convalescent Home applying for same

Readers who cannot make any definite promise at the present moment may mark their promise "if possible."

When we have received the necessary number of promises, we will then ascertain how many hospitals and homes for wounded soldiers require these gifts, and we will deal with all applications and gifts in the order in which they are received. All promises will be acknowledged in the columns of CAGE BIRDS, and the ultimate destination of each bird will also be announced as soon as possible.

PARS FROM THE POST-BAG.

We have space for a few only of the many kind letters received, and these are taken at random as follows:—

Sir,—I think your idea is a noble one and worthy of the support of every fancier. I have much pleasure in adding my mother's as well as my own name to your list.
ROBERT YOUNG.
Newcastle.

Pass Your Spare Coupons Along.
Sir,—Will be very pleased to forward a bird; your idea is good. I gave my spare coupon to a friend, and you will find it filled up herewith.
A. E. BRAND.
Brechin.

Will Give Two.
Sir,—I have much pleasure in offering two good singing Canaries to be given to the hospitals. You can let me know when you are ready for them and I will send them off.
A. LEITCH.
Glasgow.

A Pretty Letter from a Little Scotch Girl.
Sir,—I am just three and a half years old, and I like to hear the birds singing very much, so will be very pleased if you accept one of my birds for the soldiers who are doing so much for our country.
MARGARET G. B. UDALL.
Aberdeen.

Sir,—It will be my pleasure to give a singing cock Canary for your splendid scheme for our brave wounded soldiers, and will send it when and where you please, and will also see that it is no disgrace to the sender. Wishing your scheme that success which I am sure it deserves.
JOHN FARRAR.
Bradford.

Helping with Both Hands.
Sir,—I would like to add another bird to help cheer up the wounded. I had already promised my best bird to be sold for the War Relief Fund, but have other very nice birds coming on. I should have sent before but did not get my CAGE BIRDS for two weeks, so did not see your appeal until now. I enclose the coupon and hope that the cheery little messenger will fulfil his mission when he is needed.
(Miss) M. EVANS.
High Wycombe.

One of the Best.
Sir,—I shall be pleased to send a cock Roller Canary fit to be put on any show bench. One that I have bred myself from one of the finest strains in England. Young Rollers are not quite in condition yet for song, but if you want one soon I will send my best bird in.
W. F. BUTIN.
London.

Judge Silk Will Give "Two or More."
Sir,—Glad to give you two or more Norwich, which would help cheer the wounded. They will be colour-fed and look well and sing well. No doubt it would interest your readers to know that I have sent birds to Wales and Scotland since the war started, and they got through in good time. This goes to prove that the railways are still in good working order. Fanciers should get good results from your "Hints on how to cheapen the food bill."
A. E. SILK.

Too Much of a Good Thing!

In 1863 a number of English Skylarks imported by the Royal Zoological and Acclimatisation Society of Victoria were liberated in the neighbourhood of Melbourne, while other consignments were received and turned out in 1857, 1870, 1872 and 1873-4. A number were also liberated near Sydney in 1870. Of late years these birds have much increased in the districts around Melbourne, where, according to a communication in the July number of the "Victorian Naturalist," they have been causing considerable loss to market gardeners and horticulturists generally by destroying seedlings and young plants of cabbage, cauliflowers, radishes, turnips, and lettuces. That Larks were the culprits was fully demonstrated by an examination of the crops of cove that had been killed. These were found to be crammed with seeds and other vegetable matter, and contained no insects, though the latter at the time were unusually numerous. As the communication referred to is signed by Mr. C. French, the Government entomologist, it may be regarded as thoroughly trustworthy.

Neets of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

Correspondence.

How Can Slugs and Snails be Trapped?

SIR,—I have plenty of slugs or garden snails in my garden; the marks of their wanderings during the night are plainly visible, but all my efforts to produce a trap to catch them have failed. Can anyone advise?

R. V. WAGNER.

A Soldier's Birds to be Dispersed.

SIR,—I am sending herewith an advertisement from Mrs. C. Lloyd, Chapel-on-Leader, Earlston, who wrote me some days ago to try to dispose of her husband's entire stock of high-class Borders. She states that she knows little or nothing about them, and thought it better to part with them while in condition. I called on Saturday and selected one or two which I will keep until Mr. Lloyd returns home (let us hope amongst the victorious), and I am sure that nothing will please him better than a look at even these few from his stock, from which he has been so suddenly separated. In his spare moments, which I expect will be but few just now, he will see every one in his mind's eye along with his wife and children at home.

J. PATTERSON.

[The advt. appears under "Borders."—Ed.]

A White House Sparrow.

SIR,—I have been a reader of CAGE BIRDS for a considerable time, and I am sending you the following, which may interest your many readers:—In my garden here a couple of ordinary House Sparrows elected to build a nest in the high branches of a plane tree. The young hatched out over a fortnight ago, and I was astonished to notice one of the hatch to be white in colour. To encourage the birds to remain about the place, I scattered every morning a plentiful supply of canary and hemp seed, as well as wheat and bread, the latter soaked in milk. When I observed that the white youngster was doing for himself I got made a cage 6ft. long 3ft. wide and 2ft. high. I tilted the cage about six inches (just as boys do with a riddle) and led a strong cord to my bedroom, 25ft. away. For a whole week I got out of bed at four in the morning and patiently watched until ten o'clock, but my white friend would not venture inside. Dozens of others went in freely, but not he. However, my patience has been rewarded, and the bird is now in my aviary, in company with 50 or 60 other feathered friends, and he is quite happy. The bird is as near as possible to being as white as the paper on which I am writing. There is not a brown or shaded feather on his body, wings, or tail. The feather quills are pure white. His eyes are beautiful; they resemble a rich soft ruby, almost blood-red. His beak is yellow, not such a deep yellow as a male Blackbird, and his legs are white. I have written of the bird as being a male, but I cannot tell the sex. I am only a novice and keep the birds for the purpose of instilling in my children a love of animals and birds.

WILLIAM WATT.

How Did Birds Originate?

SIR,—No reply having been made by Mr. Wells to my letter I conclude he has either been called away from his ordinary duties in the present crisis, or, unable to acquire the necessary evidence, has abandoned his dogmatic position, conscious of defeat. If the former, surely come one of those who reflected his views and shared his belief in reptilian origin might have had courage enough to advance to his standard. What is the truth? Not one single proof on the barest shred of evidence that could carry the slightest influence on the open mind of any of your readers. No attempt has been made to enlighten us on the law or agent at work in the physiological transformation of his winged reptile into the bird. He has not told us how that physical change took place, who witnessed it, or if it ever came within the knowledge and experience of mankind. He has not given the name of any reputable and responsible scientist who will prove that a bird ever evolved from a reptile. Still less can he name an authority who accepts as an established fact the theory that all variations in type had one common ancestor. For his assertion that life as we know it existed in the materials of a stagnant pool I have the utmost contempt. Profuse in assertion, liberal in self-conceit, but painfully barren in substantial facts he has no argument. His winged reptilian theory has a place only in a mentally arrested development. A bird has ever been a bird so far as human knowledge is concerned. A reptile has never been other than a reptile, and no law or agent known to man can ever make them otherwise. What is the last word on the question? Prof. Batson, a few days ago in Melbourne, showed how the Darwinian theory was dwindling before the advance of modern research and declared "that variation, therefore, now stood out as a physiological event," and gave examples to show that there was no proof that domestic animals had been developed from wild types, that modern research lent not the smallest encouragement to the view that evolution arose by the transformation of masses of individuals. I am not as Mr. Wells thinks a "disbeliever in the evolution theory." As a working theory it may have served a purpose philosophically, but as theory is not science, and never can be, it has no place in the verified testimony of exact truth. So the theory of "Bird Origin" will remain a theory, an intellectual quagmire into which Mr. Wells and Co. have fallen, and are unable to extricate themselves. A. M'LEAN.

The Fertility of Goldfinches.

A Record Which Will be Hard to Beat.

SIR,—Reading in CAGE BIRDS about the fertility of Goldfinches reminds me of a Goldie I caught some years ago at a place called Colliwell, or Collihole, about four miles from Crediton, a week before Christmas; he was a very late bird, and had not finished his moult. He bred the following season very early; in fact, he beat my tried old birds in starting. He fertilised 37 eggs the first year, and out of these I had 36 young. The 37th egg was pulled out over the nest just on the point of hatching. The next season I had 65 good eggs; I did not take a note of the number that hatched out of them. This was the best Finch I ever had for breeding, and I have had a few good ones in my time. Is this the record?

R. ELSTON.

How to Cheapen the Food Bill.

SIR,—Re the cheap feeding of birds at the present critical moment, Canaries as well as Softbills will eat greedily gentles prepared in the way Mr. Weston advocates. A panich is as prolific as anything for breeding them, and if afterwards covered with bran there is no smell; the gentles fall to the bottom as they ripen, and clean themselves in the bran. My birds will eat hawthorn berries; also I take some fine biscuit meal and scald it, and when cold I add a good handful of barley meal and sharps mixed, a handful of gentles, a hard-boiled egg, and some chopped onion (the green ends or any kind, chopped fine), some lettuce, or chickweed, dandelion, groundsel, apple, potatoes, carrots, peas, or just what is to hand, and this is devoured by all the birds, Cuckoos included, only these have more egg and a good piece of chopped raw or cooked beef. The big heads of sunflowers are now ripening, and elderberries and privet; the two last can generally be found growing wild; also plantain is in plenty just now, and blackberries are coming on apace, and flowering grass. My birds also eat savoy or any kind of cabbage, and will strip one to a skeleton when other green-food is short. Slices of dry bread are acceptable, or for a change milk may be poured over them, and maw seed or a little sugar sprinkled over. (MRS.) E. M. SARGEANT.

TO ABANDON OR NOT ABANDON?

SOME VIEWS ON THE QUESTION.

An Abertillery Fancier Votes for the Prince of Wales's Fund.

Leicester Hand-in-Hand Unanimous in "Carrying On."
SIR,—Owing to the national crisis a special meeting of the Leicester Hand-in-Hand C.B.S. was held at the White Swan Hotel, August 28th, to consider the advisability of having an open show. It was unanimously decided we should adhere to the nation's motto: "Business as Usual," therefore our open show will take place on Friday and Saturday, Nov. 5th and 6th. The classification will be as previous show and novices will be well catered for. There will be no classes cancelled or amalgamated and prize money will be guaranteed. We are confident that the fanciers who have supported us in the past will again respond to the call and help to make this well-known fixture a success.

Bristol F.A. Will Give All Its Profits to the Red Cross Society.

SIR,—I shall be glad if you can spare space for this explanation of delay in issue of schedule of our show fixed for Sept. 30 and Oct. 1. Our hall was for a time actually in the occupation of the War Office, and I suppose the fashionable course would have been for us to cancel. But our view was that the show work such as printing schedule, etc., penning, staging, and other matters, all involve the employment of much labour, and we felt it to be our duty not to throw this out so long as there was hope. We have, therefore, been meeting at short intervals to watch developments, and the hall is now free, and the printer hard at work on the schedules. I hope these will be ready by Sept. 7. Entries will remain open until Sept 19 (five days' later than the usual date), and I hope exhibitors will as a result enter promptly.

All profits are to be handed to the Red Cross Society, and so that there shall be something to hand over whether we make a profit or not, we intend to give the Red Cross Society ten per cent. of amount received for tickets sold prior to the show.

Why the Manchester & N.C.O.S. Show was Postponed.

SIR,—I have read with great interest the letters published in CAGE BIRDS on the show question. I may say that at the last two meetings of the M. and N.C. O.S. the question has been very freely discussed, with the result that we decided to postpone our show indefinitely. When discussing the question of holding a large open show this season we must take into consideration the fact that the majority of exhibitors are working men, few of whom are at present in full employment. The question arises, will these exhibitors be in a financial position to support the shows with good entries? Then again, there is carriage of the birds to be considered. We cannot say at present what the railway companies will be able to undertake in live-stock carrying. This is of the greatest importance to the Manchester show, as exhibits are sent from all over the United Kingdom. Unfortunately, the societies connected with the cage bird fancy have not, as a rule, a large banking account, and therefore cannot afford to run shows at a loss. No doubt the cancelling of these exhibitions will have some effect on the fancy, but I feel sure that our hobby is strong enough to stand the strain of one bad season without any fear of extinction. Mr. Allsopp brings forward the question of societies disbanding, and offers some very good suggestions, which I hope fanciers will take note of. I may say that, with the object of keeping our members interested, the Manchester N.C.O.S. are holding an open question debate on September 7, when all fanciers are invited to attend. I hope that secretaries of societies and those interested in the running of shows will accept the hospitality of the columns of CAGE BIRDS, and give their opinions on this important matter for the benefit of the fancy.

F. HAYWARD,

Hon. Sec. M. and N.C.O.S.

For the National Relief Fund.

SIR,—I heartily join Mr. Allsopp in his efforts to hold the Fancy together during the dark times we are passing through, owing to this iniquitous war which has been forced upon us by Germany. The cage bird Fancy has sent many a member to the front to uphold the glory of our Empire, and we all find it hard to go about our daily work while our thoughts are with them. During this terrible time the horror of war must be always uppermost in our minds. It is those at home who have to bear the suspense and uncertainty, and those are all more or less cowards who would throw away any chance of added enjoyment which may help to cheer and break such dark thoughts. In the first place let us wish that the war may come to a speedy end, and let us have our loved ones home again amongst their own hobbies and pleasures. Those at the front will never wish other fanciers to sit with doleful faces and idle hands, and see the Fancy and shows in general thrown over for this season. Societies which have any funds in hand at all and can at all see their way clear ought in fairness to go on with their shows as formerly and no one will thank them more fervently than our brave Tommies at the front.

We as fanciers ought to do all within our power to see that the shows are carried through successfully by giving a helping hand financially where required. I am very pleased to read Mr. Crawhall's letter wherein he states that the Newcastle society had a decided feeling against abandoning the show altogether; this is just what one would expect from the Newcastle fanciers, who are true sportsmen. As a further inducement for them to go on with their show as usual, if they agree to accept an offer from me, I will provide the prize money for a class on behalf of the National Relief Fund; all birds entered to be sold by auction and advertised in local papers before show. This, I am sure, would bring a good entry from fanciers, and a large number of visitors, as nearly everyone is taking a deep interest in above fund, and all households are anxious for a Canary. With every wish for the success of our fanciers and army at the front. J. PATTERSON.

A Vote for the Prince of Wales's Fund.

SIR,—While I was looking over CAGE BIRDS' last issue I was very much surprised to find that a number of societies are abandoning their open show this season, because of the present crisis. Now, Mr. Editor, I consider that each society has a splendid opportunity to make its existence known and to make patrons for the future, who under ordinary circumstances are very difficult to obtain, especially so in towns where the hobby is not so very popular. I must admit that my idea will mean a little sacrifice as regards each societies' funds, and each member would have to work a little more. My suggestion is this, that each society run their show as usual and give the entire profit to the Prince of Wales's Fund. Of course, I know that under ordinary circumstances every show does not pay, but I have no hesitation in saying that every society would have this year a handsome return because it would be for a good cause. My idea is for every member to have a book and collect as much as he can, and I consider he would have no trouble to get a large amount, for I am sure the tickets would go like fire. As for special prizes I know that every patriotic tradesman would willingly give, and these would be an extra draw in the way of entries. Now, Mr. Editor, I should like to have your opinion on this matter as well as that of other fanciers and exhibitors. A. E. MOULE.

SOFT-BILLS AS CAGE BIRDS

A practical article upon the keeping of some of our most popular Soft-bills. By "Old Hand."

ON account of its hardness and tameness, the Song Thrush is undoubtedly the most popular of the "Soft-billed" cage birds. Given a fair amount of room, a Song Thrush will live for ten or twelve years in a cage. I say "Song" because there are two kinds, similar at a glance. "Turdus musicus," our bird, is smaller than "T. viscivorus," or "Missel Thrush." The latter is not such a good songster, its note being much more shrill, and lacking the melody of the former. It is also much wilder, and therefore less suitable for the cage.

Before we speak of the Thrush's cage life, let us have a look at his domestic affairs. When the spring is fairly mild, the nest may be found during the last week in March, but the time varies three weeks either way, according to the weather. The nest is a very strong structure, being composed of roots, straw, and hay, cemented inside with mud mixed with rotten wood, without any other lining whatever. I have found them half-full of water during wet seasons. Hedges seem to be the usual building place, but hollies and trees over-grown with ivy are also selected. The eggs, which usually number five, are sky-blue in colour, spotted with black.

In about fourteen days the youngsters appear, and look rather uncomfortable without a feather bed upon which to lie. When about three weeks old they are practically fledged and soon dash out of the nest if interfered with. They are fed by the parents chiefly on insects, grubs, etc., until they can look after themselves, when the old birds do a little spring-cleaning and prepare for a second brood, two nests of young being usually reared in a season.

How the Wild Thrush Lives.

The food of the Thrush is mostly of an animal nature, snails, slugs, worms, etc., forming the chief menu. Fruit and berries are also eaten, the berries of privet, mountain ash, and hawthorn being eagerly sought after. During winter, when animal life is scarce, they may be seen round corn stacks pecking at the ears of corn. Holly berries are also eaten, but not before everything else has gone; they seem to be the last resource on the frostiest days. Practically all the year the Thrush is in song, but during spring and early summer it is at its best. As soon as the sun is up, one may hear the cock bird say, in high pitched tone, "Stick to it," "Stick to it," "You're beat," "You're beat," as if to encourage the hen to stick to her task.

Hand-reared birds are by far the most suitable to keep, as they are much steadier than caged old ones, so we will go into the process of bringing them up. The best time to take the brood is just as the feathers begin to break. If taken later they will sulk and refuse to gape, and therefore die of starvation. The nest should be taken with the youngsters therein, and placed in a small box, just large enough to keep it upright.

The food which I have used with success is the following: stale bread, about one-third of a slice, soaked in boiling water, and left to get cool. Strain off most of the water, leaving just enough to make it sloppy. Chop up finely half the yolk of a hard-boiled egg, and crush enough hemp seed so that when the kernel is sifted from the husk, there is a teaspoonful. Mix together and feed as follows: an old penholder or piece of wood, shaved off each side to look like the blade of a knife, forms an excellent feeder. Get the tiniest morsel on the end of it, and touch the edge of the nest till the young birds gape. Drop the food into their mouths as long as they will take it, and give a drop or two of water after feeding to prevent them choking. Do not give too much food at once or too big pieces. About three pieces seem to be enough for one feed, not forgetting the drop of water.

Keep on Doing It.

"Little and often should they be fed, early and late the time." The first feed should be as early as possible, the last before going to bed. Never handle them, as this seems to be fatal to them. The nest should be kept quite clean, removing the droppings as they appear. I found an old teaspoon very useful for this purpose, and always kept it in the box. Make the food fresh every morning, and keep it just warm, not too warm, or it will go sour. Scald all utensils every morning before using them, for if they are sour the birds will probably get diarrhoea. When they get a few feathers, a few ants' eggs and a sprinkle of fine sand in their food helps them on considerably. The great secret in rearing birds is early feeding, cleanliness, and non-interference.

When they get fairly well feathered the nest should be put into a fair sized cage with sand on the bottom. The youngsters will soon find their way out of the nest and try to pick for themselves. The food should then be placed inside the cage near the wires. They will soon call out when hungry, and come to the wires. Poke the stick through the wires into the food, and then into their mouths; when they have had enough, they will return to the nest to sleep. They will soon find out where the food is, and begin to peck themselves. When this happens, shake hands with yourself, for success is coming fast.

As They Get Older.

Do not alter the food all at once, but put some egg-food made less sloppy, and some packet food made according to directions, in separate dishes. Put also a shallow vessel of water in the cage for drinking purposes. Gradually withdraw the egg-food and place a few pieces of cut-up worms, snails, or meat in its stead. When these are eaten freely the birds may be separated and put into cages by themselves.

The food now should be some good packet mixture or barley meal mixed crumbly moist, not sloppy, and a few pieces of cut-up snail, worm, or meat. Hang some food on the outside of the cage as well as inside, so that they may learn to pick from that. As soon as they are seen to eat the food which is outside, withdraw that which is inside. Place a fair sized stone inside the cage and give a snail or two occasionally. These the bird will soon pick up and crack their shells against the stone to get at the dainty morsel within.

The cocks are not easily distinguished from the hens, but are usually the brightest marked ones, and very often the smaller of the two. The hens are not much used except for exhibition purposes, and may as well be let go to furnish some one else with a brood later on. If the cocks can be hung within hearing of a wild one they will soon begin to pick up a few notes, and by the time they are a year old they sing fairly well, but the second year is the time to hear them at their best.

My cages are of the box pattern, and are three feet long, twenty inches high, and fourteen inches from back to front. A little greenstuff—lettuce, boiled carrot, or sweet apple—should be given to keep the liver in order. Boiled carrot I like very much, as I think this helps to keep the plumage nice and tight. Berries should also be given, such as the mountain ash, or rowan, privet, or hawthorn. The best way to store berries is to gather them when ripe and dry, and place them in a box full of dry sawdust or cork dust. Caterpillars, small slugs, etc., are greatly relished, and should be given them when found. Variety of food is the chief object, and this is the secret in keeping any cage birds. Do not hang them within sight of each other, or instead of singing they will simply warble to each other.

The Master Singer of the Canary Tribe

By J. TOMLINSON.

How to keep the Roller Canary in health, to breed for pleasure and profit, and train for exhibition.

THIS water roll is uncommon, and is appreciated by those hearing it for the first time. It is rather a difficult passage to sing, and is heard in its best form when the bird with a slowly ascending watery rolling voice turns again and descends to the starting point of the roll. I believe that when this roll becomes more widely distributed it will become very popular. Its foundation should be laid in the breeding cage; young birds from some strains would learn to rise on the roll, while others would only occasionally descend to the starting point; again, others would ignore both these styles and commence at the highest point, continuing and finishing in the same key. Given in this style it has a resemblance to a bell roll, but a quick ear will notice that the voice is too forced, sometimes the watery rolling can be distinguished, while again it is indistinct, in both cases the beak is partly opened.

The deep du-du flutes, and the deep bass roll, are not learned by tuition alone. Granting the fact that the Roller is very imitative, we have to consider first whether it is purely imitation when they follow the tutor in a tour which is not sung by their parent, or whether the tour or tours have been imminent, and tuition has brought them to the surface; to be rendered in the song.

Such applications for schoolmasters tend to show that "more light" is needed on the subject. The progeny of stock birds singing different styles of song should not be bunched together and placed under one tutor. Those similarly bred, or those bred from the tutor, would be capable of producing a portion, or may be the whole of the tutor's song, while others would make a hash of it. Some young birds are very free singers, and such birds will often come into full song before others that may be a little older. Should these free singers not follow the example offered by their schoolmaster, but bring a style of song that is not desirable, they should be removed from the training room to prevent others copying their style of singing.

Birds that take the Wrong Turning.

I believe it is the desire of all Roller fanciers to produce the best possible rendering of the Roller's song, even though exhibiting should not appeal, and in view of this fact, I say again that it is not advisable to introduce into the same training room two or more tutors that sing different styles of song, for where birds of different types of song are kept together, there is a danger of the best type deteriorating. All Rollers will learn a faulty style of song sooner than a good one, and they seem to take a pleasure in repeating anything detrimental.

In some cases, birds would retain their own style of song, others only a portion of it, and intervene a part of another one's. In instances where the whole of the song is retained, many may, apart from their own song, learn to sing a portion of that belonging to another bird, and if this is an easier production than their own, the birds will favour it, and ultimately bring their own song less frequently.

Mingle the Good Qualities.

Where new fanciers have birds singing different styles of song, and where such have not become intermingled one with the other, I would advise them to limit the number to two, choosing the best, and endeavour to cultivate and blend the good qualities of both in this way. Take a cock from one strain, or type of song, and mate with a hen from the other, and vice versa, choosing hens that are the closest related to, or those that breed the best singing cocks; a few good hens may also be kept in reserve. By this first cross the qualities of both strains will be blended in the same bird, and these youngsters should be trained under the best singer of the two old birds (or, if a more classical one could be procured, that would be suitable, so much the better, but so little reliance can be placed on this, just when they are needed, that it is only a forlorn hope).

In the event of the first cross not being successful, take the best singing old cock, and mate to those of his daughters that come from the same nests as the young cocks which are the most accomplished singers. The young cocks produced from this second cross will have a preponderance of their sire's blood, and should be able to produce his style of song. Young cocks produced from the first cross, could be mated with the hens that have been kept in reserve, some of these will be sisters to their sire. Use one cock with one hen for one nest, and try a different hen for the next nest, in order to find the blood that "blends properly." Don't inbreed extensively unless you have a definite object in doing so. All birds must be healthy, strong, and the deeper the voice tone the better will be the results.

The Care of the Tutor.

The choice of the tutor is equally as important as procuring well-bred stock birds, and it is very unwise to delay the selection until the bird is actually required for training purposes. If the selection is to be made from the fancier's own stock, the tutor should be chosen before commencing to feed up for breeding purposes. The selected bird should receive a careful dieting, in order to keep its song to the normal tone. If cocks are fed for breeding purposes with egg food and other nutritious diets, and have been for intervals of a week or more in the breeding cage through the breeding season, they will not be singing in their best style. The song will come in short wild bursts, and it is unlikely that they will return to their original style of song until after the moult, and to regain this careful management is required, as I have previously described.

Club Reports.

BRIGHTON AND HOVE C.B.A.

Meeting held Aug. 26, adjourned from Aug. 12. It was unanimously decided to postpone the open annual show indefinitely owing to the present crisis.—W. H. Gibb, Hon. Sec.

MORPETH C.B.S.

Meeting Aug. 29, Mr. Seely presided over an average attendance; after a long discussion it was decided owing to the national crisis to abandon the annual show for 1914.—W. Summers, hon. sec.

ROTHERHAM C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held Mail Coach Inn. It was decided to adjourn meeting until Sept. 5 to give sec. time to p.c. all members to see if it be possible to run open show or not, owing to the present conditions of the war.—Taylor and Bailey, secs.

SHETTLSTON C.B.S.

Meeting held Johnston's, Aug. 12, Mr. Wood presiding over a good turnout of members. We fixed the date of our annual show for December 12, in Hill Street Hall; judges Mr. Chalmers, Kirkintilloch; Mr. Martin, Glasgow; and Mr. Craig, Tollcross. Next meeting Johnston's Hall, Sept. 9, at 7.30. To make up classification for annual show.—A. Berry.

MARKINCH P.P. AND C.B.S.

Special committee meeting held in Listers Rooms, Aug. 25, Mr. Geo. Mitchell presiding. Sec. read letters from both proprietors of the halls stating that they had been commanded as hospitals for an indefinite period. The committee had no alternative but to postpone the annual show which they very much regret, and they all hope that the war will have a speedy and successful end for the Allies.—John Lindsay, sec.

LEIGH C.B.S.

Second of three table shows, Aug. 19, for N.F. birds. Entries did not come up to expectations owing to most of the young birds being in the moult, but what were there were very good. Mr. E. Clare, of Leigh, a former member of the society, judged, and his awards gave every satisfaction. NOR: 1, Ordish; 2, Dawson. YORKS.: 1, 2, 3, vhc. Spiby; lic, c, Hamer. MULES: 1, 2, 3, Taylor.—R. Charleson, sec.

DERBY C.B.S.

Meeting Aug. 29, Normanton Hotel, Mr. J. Sharman presiding. After a long discussion it was unanimously decided to purchase a silver cup for competition for Yorkshire class. The club will now have two cups for competition at the annual members' show, the other being for Norwich. Visiting committee elected: Norwich class, Messrs. Morrell, Twells, Sharman, Thompson. Yorks., Messrs. Cockeram and Wheldon. Crests, Mr. W. Stevens. Agreed that members show take place in November.—F. W. Jordan, hon. sec.

PORTH AND RHONDDA VALLEY C. AND C.B.S.

Meeting August 29, headquarters, Mr. Legg chair; good muster present. I am glad to see the members sticking together and trying to help one another; it shows we have the right sort of fanciers, and men that will work to help the Fancy. The way in which they gave all prize money won at F.F. shows is a true sign that we have good sportsmen as well as good fanciers in the society, and with men like these the society is sure to prosper. Decided not to have diplomas for last F.F. show, but those who want one can have one by paying for same. Next meeting Sept. 12, headquarters, 7; show business and other matters of importance.—J. S. Jones.

BURNLEY O.S.

Meeting headquarters, Star Inn, Church Street, Aug. 12, Mr. Catlow chair; and a good turnout of members. A proposition was carried that in future any member who wins one first in open novice or three firsts in our members' show must afterwards compete in champion section. Decided to postpone the Palace trip for a time to see how trade improves, as nearly all our members are out of employment; but we are hoping things will have improved by the time the next meeting is called. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded our late sec., Mr. Whittaker, for past services. After business a late member, Mr. Stackhouse, and a few of his friends who are expected to go to the front, called to see us before they left Burnley, and a right good time we all had. (Of course, we all wanted them, if possible, to bring a few Belgians back.) Next meeting Sept. 9, hoping to have a good turnout as we are doing very well.—T. Chadwick, sec.

SOUTHERN BORDER F.C.

Will members please note that a meeting will be held at headquarters, The Guildhall, Wandsworth Road, September 14. Members who can possibly do so are requested to attend, as the business is most important. Owing to several of the patronage shows having been cancelled, it will be necessary to consider how the points competition, etc., shall be conducted, and as it is probable there will only be about three shows left, I should like to hear from the provincial committee what they would suggest should be done. It would also be interesting to hear what other specialist clubs are going to do in like cases. Don't forget the date, September 14.—Geo. Burton, Sec. pro tem.

SCOTTISH CRESTED C.C.

Meeting Neilson's Temperance Hotel, Glasgow, Aug. 22, Mr. John McLay presiding. Present: Messrs. Lambie, McNaughton, McLaren, Noble, Smart, Shillinglaw, and secretary. Letters read from Messrs. Adams and Whittam expressing regret at being unable to attend. Applications for club patronage were considered, and following granted: City of Glasgow, Lochgelly, Cowdenbeath, and Scottish National. The question of club show was discussed, but owing to the grave crisis which the country is passing through it was thought desirable to allow the matter to stand in abeyance. Revision of club rules was gone into very carefully, secretary being instructed to get same into printer's hands as early as possible. Messrs. D. C. Murray (Haddington), William Watson (Uphall), James Hood (Shettleston), and Alexander Macmaster (Dundee) were elected members. Vote of thanks to chairman brought meeting to a close. Subs. are now overdue, and should be sent on at once.—John Young, Hon. Sec.

S. LONDON COLUMBARIAN & F.S.

Business as Usual.

Meeting at headquarters, August 27, a large number present. Chairman, Mr. Geo. Munday, explained that the meeting had been called to consider, in view of the unsettled state of the country, the advisability of holding our annual show. He pointed out that, although it was only a members' show, it was one of the largest in the country, and the expenses were always very heavy. He was fully aware that fanciers generally would not have the money to spend on their hobby, as in the past, and entries were almost certain to suffer; in fact, there might be a loss on the show. At the same time he was of opinion that we all wanted something else to think of besides the War, and he thought it would be nothing less than a calamity if the old South London—after holding a show, through good times and bad, for 40 years—should show the white feather now; he thought we should all try to live up to the country's motto, "Business as Usual." Several members strongly supported the chairman, and thought it advisable, in the interests of all concerned, that the show should be held and that we should not give way to panic. Others—and among these were some old and experienced fanciers—were of opinion that the show ought to be abandoned; they pointed out that money and work would be very scarce; fanciers would have to get rid of their stock, and the public would not want to visit shows. After further discussion, in which everyone took part, a vote was taken, and there were loud cheers when it was found the majority were in favour of holding the show. Promises of help were forthcoming from all over the room, and, to clinch matters, those who had voted against the show all promised to do their best to make it a success. This is the right sort of spirit; it will do no one any good to look on the black side of things; we have all got to suffer in some way, and we must all try to make it easier for each other. If every member will do his or her best there ought to be no reason why we should not have a good show. A further meeting will be held in conjunction with the pigeon show on September 10th, 1914, and I want all members who can do so to attend, as there will be important matters to debate.—G. Burton, Sec.

Questions and Answers.

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS

- (1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and conclude with either the correct name or a pseudonym.
- (2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query.
- (3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.
- (4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.
- (5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated on the left-hand corner of the query.
- (6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest.
- (7)—If an answer by post is desired from our specialists, a postal order for postage must accompany any query relating to sickness of birds, or a shilling in ordinary enquiries, with a stamped and addressed envelope in either case. Dead birds must not be sent to the office (see Post-mortems).
- (8)—All who desire letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence. All the fees received from this source will be handed over in full to the "Referee's" Poor Children's Fund (London).
- (9)—All queries must be addressed to the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Postcards are not admissible.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must, of course, be sent to the Editor.

Canaries.—Claude St. John, British Birds, Mules, and Hybrids.—H. Norman, Foreign Birds.—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Wild Bird Life.—H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc., of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Borders, Scotch, or any other variety of Canary, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his questions for answer to some leading specialist on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

ROUGH AND MOPY (H. G. H.).—The bird's position in the window is probably the cause of its condition. Move it further into the room in a bright, airy, but not draughty position, where the temperature is fairly equable, and do not allow it to hang near or over a burning light in the evenings. Give a staple diet of a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition give separately every third day a morsel of bread the size of a hazel nut soaked in cold milk, drained, two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it, and finally sprinkled with soft sugar, and on the intervening days give first a spray of some green salad, and next a small teaspoonful of the seed mixture you now use as staple food. In the drinking water dissolve a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea every second day for a week, and after this give instead 20 drops of chemical food every second day for two or three weeks.

HIRING BIRD ORGAN (A. Hopkins).—Sorry, but I cannot tell you where or whether you could hire a bird organ for the purpose of teaching your young birds to sing. You could buy them, but I doubt whether you could get one on hire for the season when it is most required. Your best plan would be to insert a small advert, in our prepaid columns inviting offers, or write to one or two of the large dealers who stock the instruments and ask if they were open to let out on hire.

A QUESTION OF MATING (A Lover of Song).—It is quite too late to think of mating birds this season. You must now wait until the end of next March or the beginning of April. The results of mating a good Roller cock with a good Crested hen would be the production of crossbred youngsters, of which the cocks would be fair songsters, but considerably inferior to good pure Rollers, and of no use as stock birds for either breed. It would in short be wasting the energies of two good birds. If, as your pseudonym suggests, singing qualities are your chief aim, you should mate the Roller cock with a Roller hen of a good singing strain, and train the youngsters under a good songster. If you want the best in song, you must sacrifice appearances.

TROUBLE WITH FEET (Constant Reader).—I should say the young birds are in rather gross condition of body through living too exclusively on a diet that is too rich for them, and, perhaps, the perches are not quite the proper shape and size. The sample of perch you mention did not reach me, so it was probably lost on the way, or overlooked in sending the letter. See that they are of such a size that the birds can grip them quite comfortably; neither too large, nor so small that the claws meet underneath as the birds stand on them. Keep them, and also the cage doors, as clean as possible, and do not use a very sharp flinty grit on the floors. Reduce the proportion of boiled rape you are giving by about one-third, using, say, two-thirds of a teaspoonful to the one and half teaspoonfuls of soft food, and in this quantity use two teaspoonfuls of sugar instead of three, and add a teaspoonful of maw seed. Give the cracked hemp twice a week only, and only give the sulphate of iron to those birds which are nearing the end of the moult. Give a spray of watercress daily, and for the next week add to the water for the affected birds each day a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea and ten drops of lemon juice. This should suffice to clear the system and quite prevent the trouble.

A QUESTION OF TEMPERATURE (Leaguer).—If the birds have been bred and reared under natural conditions of temperature I would not advise you to begin the use of unnatural conditions as regards temperature, especially as you appear to be a tyro at the game. If housed in snug, dry quarters, free from cold, cutting draughts, the use of artificial heat is quite a superfluity, and apt with a novice to do far more harm than good. Where it is used, a temperature of about 45 degrees is what you should aim at during the winter months, and this should be maintained fairly regularly, not allowed to run up and down by fits and starts. A system of hot water pipes with the heating apparatus outside is about the best means of applying heat, but I cannot say what is the cheapest method, as this doubtless varies tremendously according to one's locality and position. The cheapest form is doubtless always the most risky and dangerous.

CLAW BENT BACKWARD (J. C.).—As the deformity is of such old standing, my advice is to leave it severely alone. Having only one claw affected the bird will manage comfortably enough with it as it is, and any attempt to rectify it will probably only impose suffering upon the patient with exceedingly little chance of any benefit accruing therefrom.

CANARY QUERISTS

should consult St. John's "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (7d.); House's "Canary Manual" (1/2); Battye's "Yorkshire Canaries" (1/1); House's "Norwich Canaries" (1/1); Weston's "Stock Book" (7d.); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); Norman's "Ariaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); Ramsden's "Colour-feeding" (3d.); "Seeds and Foods for Cage Birds" (1/2); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each): No. 5 "The Pet Canary," No. 6 "Aling Birds and How to Care Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 10 "The Roller," No. 23 "The Border Fancy," No. 24 "Green Canaries." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

DEFORMED FOOT (Christie).—No treatment is likely to be of any avail after this lapse of time, and as it would also inflict needless suffering upon the bird to interfere now, it is in no way warrantable to do so. Therefore my advice is to leave it severely alone. Having only one foot affected, the bird will get along comfortably enough as it is, and it will be no detriment at all to it, unless it is a show bird, when it would, of course, hamper it in competition.

SORE FEET (W. Clayden).—See that the perches are made of a nice soft wood, and keep them as clean as possible. Also keep the cage floor as clean as possible for the time being, and it will assist materially in attaining this end to strew the floor liberally with clean, dry sawdust and renew it frequently for a time. Catch the bird and bathe the feet for a few minutes daily in a solution of boracic acid—a teaspoonful of the acid dissolved in a saucerful of warm water. After bathing, dry carefully, and gently anoint the whole of each foot with zinc ointment, but do not leave any surplus grease about them to collect the dirt from cage floor. Dissolve a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea in the drinking water every second day, for a week.

LOSING USE OF LEGS (Crest).—I can only suggest three probable causes of the loss of the use of the legs in the young Crest: 1. You might have accidentally injured the back in catching and returning it to the nest; 2. it may have been already affected with severe constipation when it left the nest, and the bowels have become blocked and inactive; 3. or the toes might have been strained by its first excursion on to the perches, which caused the hind toes to be turned forward and become useless. The latter cause seems to me to be the most likely, and if this is the case you can now only put on rubber bands for a fortnight or so, and then give it rather thin perches, which should be placed in the most convenient position possible, and fixed securely in the cage. The method of putting on these bands, and the subsequent management of the perches you will see given in detail in this column many times in the last few months. In the second event add a little extra succulent green salad to its parents' dietary, and in the first named case you can only allow it to rest as quietly as possible to give nature a chance to repair the mischief.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

BULLFINCH WITH DIFFICULTY IN BREATHING (Puzzled).—I am afraid that your Bullfinch has at some time or other been over fed and over shown. You had better discontinue giving linseed in his seed mixture, as this is hardly necessary during the summer months. Supply liberally all kinds of wild seeds, fruit and berries. If he is to be of any use to you as an exhibition bird during the coming season it is quite time he commenced to moult. I would, therefore, advise you to encourage him to do so by change of temperature or by partly covering up his cage. Let him still continue to bathe, but be sure it is on fine days only, and then during the morning. To relieve the breathing give the following in his drinking water: Carbonate of ammonia 3 grains, tincture of squills 3 drops, pure glycerine 5 drops. This should be given fresh twice daily in a glass or china drinker. You can ask your chemist to make up sufficient for one week, when it should be discontinued. When he is well in his moult I would advise a course of chemical food, say a small teaspoonful in his drinking water, first boiling the water, or it will not mix properly.

THE RED BREASTED LINNET (Forrester, Longton).—If your question is a serious one I am afraid your knowledge of birds must be very limited; it simply amounts to this: "Is a Linnet a Goldfinch?" If you saw the two together you would not hesitate in pronouncing them to be quite different species. They are both Finches, but the Linnet is a brown bird with white on the edges of the large feathers of the wings. The Goldfinch has a sharper beak, a red face and yellow wings with black tips. In the early part of the spring the brown breast of the Linnet commences to assume a ruddy tone, and as the spring advances this increases in depth, until the breeding season, early summer, when it is quite rich crimson, in some specimens almost vivid.

YELLOW-HAMMER FOR EXHIBITION (F. G.).—Judges differ somewhat as to the most important point in the Yellow Hammer. According to the published standard fifty points are given for steadiness, but I am inclined to think the head markings would bear more weight with most judges than any other characteristic. A bird poor in this point would be at once handicapped. Generally speaking the less black about the head the better, although during the show season there is sure to be some which diminishes as the spring advances. The markings should be clean cut, and from the forehead to the back of the head should extend in the form of the letter V. Richness of colour upon the back is desirable, and the spangling clear and distinctly defined. Size and condition, richness of yellow, and, of course, steadiness, are all important points, and receive due consideration by a careful judge. (2) A little soft food during the moult is very useful if the bird will eat it, also a few mealworms or other insects. Just a pinch of colour food in the insectic mixture is used by most exhibitors. This should on no account be overdone, only sufficient given to enrich the plumage.

ABOUT A HEN BULLFINCH (Jas. Reeves).—I am sorry you have not given me more particulars respecting the treatment of your Bullfinch, because, as a rule, these little ailments are caused by injudicious feeding. Your seed mixture may consist of something quite unsuitable to a Bullie, although possibly the correct thing for one of the other Finches. I would advise you to send for one of our little Nutshell Booklets on the Bullfinch, which you can procure post free for 2½d. In the mean time make up the following mixture:—Two parts canary, one part each of teazel and summer rape, this will be its staple food. It may also have a few sunflowers daily, and a spoonful of good wild seed mixture, twice a week. In addition to this collect seeding tops of groundsel, chickweed, shepherd's purse, pliantain, dock, etc., and give the bird a daily supply together with blackberries and other fruit. Let it bathe freely on fine days, and give it a big cage to exercise in. If you treat the bird in this manner it should soon be in good condition without the use of medicines. It should now be going into moult, so keep it in an equable temperature and away from strong currents of air, as birds easily catch cold at this period.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

MIXTURE FOR ROSELLA (J. H., New Reader).—One quart each canary and white millet, one pint oats, half a pint each hemp and sunflower seeds, the whole to be well mixed, will meet the requirements of those birds so far as seed is concerned, but you must also supply fruit, green food, grit, cuttlebone, and water for drinking and bathing.

GREY PARROT (M. Smith).—Whenever the swelling becomes abnormal it would be well to prick it with a sharp needle and so allow the escape of air—the needle or lance should be well cleansed for each occasion. For the next fortnight put 15 drops of tincture of lobelia into the bird's drinking water daily—one ounce of which should be sufficient in a suitable vessel, not a metal one. Do not supply any clear water during this period. Supply the usual seed mixture, also fruit, nuts, and biscuits if it cares for them, and about a couple of tablespoonfuls of milk sop daily. Keep it in a room where the temperature is fairly even, as a fluctuating temperature will only aggravate the trouble. Report progress a fortnight hence.

YOUNG BUDGERIGARS (Budgerigars).—You can only settle this point by persistent observation, as it arises from one of two causes, viz., mice or other adult birds in the aviary, not necessarily their own parents, though it is quite possible the latter may be the culprits, but whoever the culprits are, they should be discovered by close observation, and when discovered, caught up and should consult Page's "Foreign Birds for Beginners" (1/1); Arthur's "Budgerigars and Cockatiels" (6d.); Arthur's "Parrots for Pleasure and Profit" (7d.); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods and Wild Plants" (1/2); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); "Colour-feeding" (3/4); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each); No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 14 "Goldfinches," No. 16 "Aradants," No. 17 "The Grey Parrot," No. 18 "Budgerigars," No. 19 "The Pekin Robin," No. 20 "Waxbills." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

given their liberty, as you would not wish to sell them and occasion similar trouble in some other aviary. If the parents are maiming their own young they must be got rid of, as they will exercise their malice upon other broods than their own ultimately.

AFRICAN GREY PARROT (Pollie Perkins).—Parrots are social creatures and object to being left alone, and usually give vent to their displeasure by some such method; be thankful yours does not scream at such times. I had a Parrot which shouted itself hoarse when left alone, but it shouted out one of our names which it had learned. The best remedy is, of course, to carry the cage into the sitting-room when the kitchen is likely to be unoccupied for any period. Paying it a visit and gently chiding it, a Parrot is rather quick to recognise such, will tend to break it of the habit. It evidently has heard shrill whistles in its previous quarters, and acquired calls and words are not easily unlearned. Many London Parrots—I am acquainted with several—mimic motor horns and the cab call whistles in a most realistic manner. Your best course will be to leave it alone as little as possible, and to gently chide it whenever it utters the whistle in your presence; if this fails, try covering it up for short periods whenever it's too noisy.

HAND-REARING BUDGERIGARS (A Novice).—The book you refer to is not from my pen, and I must confess to not having read it. You will find your experiment a very troublesome one; they must be fed very early, and at short intervals during the day, and of course must be given fairly warm quarters. Most certainly follow the directions given in the book, and though you may try it, I rather doubt the "fill-up" being of much use, as these birds are fed quite differently to Canaries. An avicultural acquaintance has just hand-reared some Lovebirds which had been forsaken by their parents, and her method was as follows: Their first food was very sloppy, consisting mostly of Osborne biscuits, mixed with crushed wheat and milk—varied with soaked "Uveco" and crushed wheat—they were fed at first from a teaspoon, simply pouring the food down their throats, and they soon learned to feed from the dish, but they were a terrible lot of trouble at first. The same method should answer with the Budgerigars, but I advise you only to take in hand two at first, and those about seven days old should answer your purpose. After experience with these, you can commence with younger birds next time.

AILING GREY PARROT (H. B. H.).—I note your remark that you have had four die similarly; in such case I would ask you, have they all occupied the same cage? if so, it is possible they have caught the infection from the cage. A cage in which a newly-imported Grey (I take you are referring to newly-imported birds, though you give no details) has died should be thoroughly sterilised before being used for another bird. If you can handle the bird, foment or soak its legs and feet in fairly hot water, dry with a soft cloth, and paint with neat whiskey. You say nothing as to how you are treating this bird, but if it will take it, give it one or two tablespoonfuls of milk sops daily, to which add half a teaspoonful of cod liver oil emulsion. Also put one teaspoonful of Dinnoford's Magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, and on the intermediate days half a teaspoonful of syrup of phosphates. Keep the bird warm, and where it will neither be subjected to draught nor sudden fluctuations of temperature. Full details as to acquisition and treatment should always be given with such queries. You must not use metal drinkers while giving drugs. Report progress with full details a fortnight hence.

ADVERTISEMENT CHARGES.

6d. for the first eighteen words. One Halfpenny for each word over eighteen. Name and address to be reckoned. MINIMUM, 18 words 6d.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny. No single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Sixpence.

Headlines or Footlines, 1/-, 1/6 2/-, 2/6, according to size.

The rate for displayed advertisements is 7/6 per inch. Rates for a series on application.

ADVERTISEMENTS UNACCOMPANIED BY CORRECT REMITTANCE WILL NOT BE INSERTED.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL. The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements must in all cases bear the bona-fide name and address of the advertiser, and no advertisement will be inserted if addressed to a receiving office, or similar place of call.

Small prepaid advertisements of a general nature and not connected in any way with the Cage Bird Trade are inserted at the rate of 1/6 per word throughout. Minimum 12 words 6d.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 151, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

REPEATING ADVERTISEMENTS.

Owing to the number of announcements received we cannot guarantee to repeat advertisements unless the previous issue, Page and Column are stated by the advertiser.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers in all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

Buyers, Please Note

Despite the heavy advances in the price of raw materials, I am determined not to raise the prices of goods until my present extensive stock is exhausted. As it is impossible to say how long this stock will last, intending purchasers are advised to place their orders as soon as possible to avoid increase in price. Single trap cages, 6d. each, 5/- dozen; double ditto, 1/- each, 9/- dozen; treble ditto, 1/3 each, 12/- dozen, all with separate compartment for call bird, in addition to traps stated; patent self-setting and self-acting trap cages (reg. No. 23927), guaranteed to automatically reset immediately each bird is caught, 1/6 each; self-acting spring net traps, easiest working, and most effective traps on market, catch and hold uninjured any sized bird, 24" by 18 inches, 1/2; ditto, 18 by 14 inches, 11d. each, post free; call cages, all wire, soldered tops and wood bottoms, 4d. each, 3/- dozen; Goldfinch, Bullfinch, Linnet, and Lark cages, 6d. each; 5/- dozen; clap nets, made from superfine thread netting, specially knitted for bird netting, 3in. mesh, 3 yards long, 5ft. deep and 4ft. fly, 4/- pair; ditto, 4 yards, 5/-; 5 yards, 6/-; 6 yards, 7/-; 7 yards, 8/-; 8 yards, 9/-; 9 yards, 10/-; 10 yards, 11/- per pair. All clap-nets consist of 2 nets to the pair and price includes all fittings ready for immediate use. Loose netting, same as used in above nets, 7ft. deep, 3d. yard; 9ft. deep, 4d. yard; 12ft. deep, 5d. yard; special strong netting, 1/2 mesh, 10ft. deep, 5d. yard, all post free. Genuine Japanese bird lime, guaranteed to stand all weathers and hold any bird from wren to rook, 1lb. 6d., 1lb. 10d., 1lb. 1/6; sample, 5d., all post free. Absolutely everything required by catchers in stock, and all guaranteed brand new goods; send stamp for full printed list, which also gives hints on net making. Practically every professional catcher in the Kingdom uses my articles, and I guarantee every purchaser fullest satisfaction or return his money in full. During the term of the war many people will probably have spare time; to what better use can they put it than to have some real good sport in bird catching, and at same time augment their income by disposing of their surplus catches, but to insure this they must have serviceable articles made by a man who thoroughly understands what is required for successful catching. Every article sent out by me is guaranteed to have been properly tested and exactly same quality as supplied to my own catchers. (1740)

THERE is no more lovely seed-eater than the popular Gouldian Finch, which, however, is very difficult to establish. This trouble can be overcome, and the variety kept successfully. But you must follow the hints given in "Nutshell No. 14," from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C., post free for 2d. From agents (see list frequently published).

WAXBILLS (Golden-breasted, Orange-checked, Grey, and St. Helena). Than this interesting quartette, which can be purchased at from 2/6 to 7/6 a pair, there are few more charming foreigners. They can be successfully kept, too, with little difficulty if you will follow the hints given by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., in "Nutshell No. 20," 2d. post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Call at any of our agents and get it for 2d. (list frequently published).

THOUGH they can often be purchased for the modest half-crown, Pekin Nightingales are very beautiful in plumage, have a fine song, and make ideal cage or aviary birds. Some very helpful information on this variety will be found in "Nutshell No. 19," the author of which is Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Get it at once, 2d. post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from our agents (list published frequently).

A special meeting of the Western Counties O.S., Plymouth, was held on Sept. 1 to consider the advisability of holding the annual open show arranged for Oct. 13, 14, writes Mr. Thos. Pope, hon. sec. A postcard poll of the members resulted in 13 voting for holding the show and 37 against, and it was consequently decided not to have open show this year, but to hold a members' show on Nov. 25, at which all members' challenge enps will be completed for.

The Avicultural Magazine, the organ of the Avicultural Society, for September contains a delightful account by Mrs. K. Currey of her tame Bullfinch. Dr. Butler concludes his "Thirty-two Years of Aviculture," the very useful "English names for the Parrots" is continued by Dr. E. Hopkinson, and amongst the other contents are some most interesting "Glimpses of South American Ornithology" by Lord Brabourne.

A most interesting item in the September issue of "British Birds," Messrs. Witherby, High Holborn, is a record of the first visit to our shores of the Ruppell's Warbler. It is sad to note that the unique visitors (there were two of them) were shot on sight. A photograph of one of the victims as set up by the taxidermist is given, and the plumage of old and young is fully described by Mr. H. F. Witherby. The opening article is "A Report on the Land-rail Inquiry," by Mr. H. G. Alexander, and the usual monthly "Notes" are especially interesting.

Twitterings.

Mr. P. Greenall, hon. sec. Wigan Roller Canary Society, 2, Short Street, Pemberton, Wigan, asks that secretaries of Roller Clubs should send him the dates of their open contests.
 I got a pleasant surprise on Friday morning when I saw my unfledged yellow Cinnamon cock on the front page of CAGE BIRDS, writes Mrs. Tweddle. I thank you very much.

We hear that no less than 40 members of the staff of Messrs. Spratt's Patent, Ltd., have been called to the front. The firm is generously paying half salaries while they are away, and keeping their places open.

Mr. J. Fairgrieve, sec. of the E. Lothian C.B.S., writes that it has been decided to hold the annual show as usual. A report of the meeting appears in our Correspondence column.

The Drill Hall being required by military authorities, and no other large hall available, writes Mr. A. Walker, hon. sec. Torquay F. and F.S., we are compelled to cancel our show on Oct. 15, but hope to hold a members' show later on.

As a special meeting of the Windsor and Dist. C.B.A., writes Mr. H. W. Simms, sec., it was decided, owing to the War, to cancel our open show arranged for Oct. 28. We shall, however, hold a members' show on the same date, and anyone joining previously to Oct. 1 will be eligible to show as a member. Our radius is 25 miles, and sub. 2s. 6d. per year.

Since our last issue news is to hand of the cancellation of the following shows: Torquay F. and F.S., Burnley C.B.S., Southampton P.P. and C.B.A., Windsor C.B.A., Upper Rhondda C.B.S., Crewe O.S., Bishop Auckland C.B.S., Western Counties O.S., Ayr C.B.C., Leeds Roller C.B.C., Portsmouth and S. Counties C.B.S., Burton-on-Trent C.B.S., Blyndon-on-Tyne C.B.S., Leeds C.B.S., Newcastle-on-Tyne C.B.S., Sheffield O.S., Southampton C.B.S. Many societies are coming to a decision at their next meeting, as will be seen from our Club Notices column, and it is hoped that these meetings will be largely attended so that the question of abandonment or non-abandonment may have full consideration.

A Timely Topic.
 The members of the City and Suburban A.C.B. are having a discussion at their Sept. 14 meeting, on how to economically feed Canaries, etc. (See "Club Notices" this week.) It ought to prove interesting and valuable. Visitors will be welcomed.

"Business as Usual"
 The annual show of the New Cross C.B.S. will be held as originally fixed, and the show of the Northwood F.A. (Middlesex), fixed for Nov. 11-12, will be partly open, extra members' classes being added. Colinton and Currie Parishes O.S. also decided to hold the annual show arranged for Nov. 7. The above are in addition to the societies letters from which Canaries appear in our correspondence columns.

Little Owls are Destroyers.
 A South Cheshire keeper states that just before closing up his peasant chick coops on the evening of June 2 he saw a Little Owl swoop down and pick up a small chick and dash it on the grass. He rescued the chick, and found it badly cut on the back of the neck. The next day he rifled a nest of owls, and wrung the neck of the female bird. Near by he found the bones of several small birds, but whether of Pheasants and Partridges he was unable to state. A second keeper near Malpas tells me that in June he shot a Little Owl which had just left the body of a pheasant chick. There is little doubt that the Little Owl is destructive to game, though not in a manner which warrants wholesale slaughter.—W. C., in the "Manchester Dispatch."

CANARIES FOR THE HOSPITALS.

THE past week has seen a further gratifying response to our request for promises of singing Canaries for presentation to the War Hospitals which have been established in various parts of the country. Equally gratifying have been the kindly comments which have reached us concerning our scheme, a selection from which is appended.

There must be many more of our readers, however, who are anxious to do something to brighten the period of convalescence of our brave fighting-men, and we appeal to them to sign and return to us the coupon at foot without delay, so that we may know at the earliest possible moment the number of birds likely to be available for distribution. All gifts will be acknowledged in our columns, and the destination of the birds announced as soon as possible.

We may repeat that we do not ask for gifts of Canaries of high exhibition standard—we leave that to the giver—the main points are that the birds shall be young and healthy and free singers. Now, readers, let us hear from you this week certain. It is a cause to which none could be more worthy, and a pleasing method of expressing the sympathy of the bird-breeding fraternity with their stricken brothers in arms.

Messrs. Caporn (Bristol) have generously offered to co-operate with fanciers by supplying free sufficient of their noted seeds to last each bird for at least three months.

Canaries for the Hospitals

I am willing, if called on any time during the next twelve months, to supply free of cost one singing cock Canary and small travelling cage, to be presented as a gift to any Hospital or Convalescent Home applying for same.

PARS FROM THE POST-BAG.

British, Not German, Roller.
 I was delighted to see your request in CAGE BIRDS for song birds to cheer up our wounded soldiers in hospital. I am certain that the little messengers of song will Crystal Palace and the War.

 I have just had notice that the Admiralty have taken over the Crystal Palace for a recruiting centre and training ground, writes Mr. J. W. Ramsden. All fixtures will probably have to be postponed in consequence of this.

Welshmen to the Front.
 Mr. H. Watts, sec. pro. tem. of the Upper Rhondda C.B.S., writes that as many members are at the front and many more going it was decided at the last meeting not to hold an open show this season. A vote of sympathy was accorded to Mr. Richards, the hon. sec., who is lying ill.

The Chough in Ireland.
 It is satisfactory to know that Choughs are still fairly numerous in many of their old haunts across the Irish Channel, in spite of their steady diminution on this side. Pairing for life, like the Crow or Raven, the Chough rarely forsakes a well-chosen nesting site, even when robbed of its first clutch. Solitary clefts, fissures inaccessible from above, the roofs of water-worn caves, and other similar well-concealed haunts are used year after year in these same suitable cliff stretches which their predecessors have occupied for centuries, but the nests are rarely less than a mile apart where they have room.

Good News for Pigeon Fanciers.
 Owing to the war all traffic in live pigeons has been stopped, the railway companies having been instructed by the War Office not to accept them for conveyance. This severe restriction on an important industry practically stopped the buying and selling of fancy pigeons. Mr. C. A. Honce, who has been in correspondence with the authorities in London on the matter, first of all obtained permission for pigeons to be accepted for transit to shows. That concession not being enough, he was much appreciated by them, and I sincerely trust that you will have a generous response from our many fanciers to your thoughtful appeal. You can rely on me to supply you a British Roller Club songster.

 A. GOODING.

Westbourne Park.
A Khaki Canary Promised.
 I think it a grand idea of yours to try and brighten the dull hours of the sick and wounded soldiers with a lively little pet, and I shall be pleased to send a nice Cinnamon Norwich, and two if they are required.
 G. A. PARKER.
 Stratford.

Will Keep in Reserve.
 I have enclosed coupon from CAGE BIRDS and will keep a fine singing cock Canary in reserve, and will send same on at once free of all cost as soon as I get your order.
 E. S. TAYLOR.

Chatteris.
One Or More From a Noted Stud.
 A proposal worthy of every fancier's support. Will give one, or more if necessary, when in full song.
 J. TOMLINSON.
 Newcastle, Staffs.

Cage, Bath, and All Complete.
 I shall be pleased to present a Canary, cage, bath, and hanging chain. As I am near to the Herbert Hospital, Woolwich, I should like to take it there if they will accept it.
 G. PECK.
 Dartford.

A Nurse Will Give of the Best.
 It gives me great pleasure to respond to your call for singing Canaries. I will send you one, or, if necessary, two, of the best birds I have in my bird-room, Rollers of the finest strain, and trust they may bring many bright moments to the wounded soldiers who have done so much for their country. I think it should be clearly understood by applicants for Canaries that they must not be kept in the travelling cages.
 NURSE BELSTEN.
 Newport, Mon.

(We shall, of course, make arrangements for the supply of cages in which the birds may be permanently kept.—EDITOR.)

Another Promise of Two.
 I shall have much pleasure in sending when called upon two cock Canaries for our fighting brothers.
 H. BILL.
 Lyndhurst.

Friends Will Help If They Are Asked.
 I have pleasure in sending the enclosed coupon, also one which I have got a friend to fill up.
 B. HILL.
 Harpenden.

he has this week paid a visit to London personally and has secured further concessions, hence breeders of pigeons will now be able to buy and sell as formerly by using a special label franked by the C.I.D. of Scotland Yard. Such labels may be obtained from Mr. C. A. House, "Pigeons," Idle, Bradford, but they will only be issued to known breeders, and a guarantee will have to be given that the birds will not be used for any improper purpose or be allowed to enter into the possession of countries with whom we are at war.

Newcastle's Decision.
 At a meeting of the Newcastle Cage Bird Society, we are informed that it was decided not to hold a show this year, but to endeavour to raise 100 Canaries and other pet cage birds to be sold for the benefit of the local fund being raised by the Lord Mayor.

What War May Bring Us.
 Early autumn is the great time of migration of our winter visitors, and it is not too much to think that, owing to the turmoil on the Continent and on the North Sea, we may this winter see some strange visitors. Birds are undoubtedly endowed with finer perceptions than we humans, and many will avoid the area of air disturbed by explosive and poisonous gases, and deflect further westward than usual. The Continental sub-varieties of our Blackbirds and Thrushes may in particular be looked for, as this is the time of the moving of great flocks of these birds. Even among the smaller birds which resort to our woods and gardens one may expect strange visitors, and one hopes that careful notes will be made of all the peculiarities of any fresh bird so discovered. —"Dalesman" in the "Liverpool Post."

POST US YOUR PROMISE OF A CANARY TO-DAY.

THE MOULTING AND EXHIBITING OF MULES AND HYBRIDS.

By E. COLLINS (Barnstaple).

THOUGH I do not recommend the use of greenfood during the moult, the ripe seeds of knapweed, shepherd's purse, and plantain may be used freely, and with beneficial results, as they will afford a welcome change of diet, and will assist to improve the colour and general condition of the birds. These seeds will be found in plenty at this season of the year, but care should be taken that only the really ripe seeds are gathered. A little experience will soon enable you to select the ripe specimens. It would be advisable to lay up a store of knapweed and plantain for use during the winter months.

In addition to the ordinary seed diet, give your birds a liberal supply of linseed during the moult, and, as with the colour-food, continue its use until the birds are well through the moult, as this will give lustre and polish to the feather.

As the show season draws near, it will be necessary to keep a strict watch for birds that are not fond of the bath. Such birds must be sprayed frequently, in order to bring about that tightness and polish of feather so essential in a show specimen. If your birds bathe freely, however, there will be no need to spray them until a few days before sending them out to a show, when all birds should be treated in the following manner.

The Use of Bath and Spray.

Allow your birds the use of the bath until five days previous to the show, then gently spray them on the two following mornings. Then stop both bath and spray, as this will give the birds time to tighten up by the time the show day arrives. For the purposes of spraying it will be best to run your birds into an old show cage.

About five or six weeks before the show season commences you should carefully trim the claws and beaks of each bird. You will thus avoid the necessity of handling your birds just before a show, and possibly damaging their plumage. I well remember that during one of my visits to the Crystal Palace Exhibition, as I stood admiring that wonderful specimen of the Goldfinch-Bullfinch cross exhibited by the late Mr. Williams, of Liverpool, so well known to cage-bird fanciers as the Mule King, the proud owner of the bird came up to me and asked the loan of a pair of scissors to trim the bird's claws. He said he preferred to carry out such an operation after, rather than before the important Palace event.

Another very important matter in the preparation of our birds, and one to which a great many exhibitors do not give sufficient attention, is their training. During the summer and early moulting season, the birds should be kept in large cages, with the perches as far apart as possible, so as to give them plenty of exercise. But if our birds are to do themselves justice at the shows, it will be necessary to get them thoroughly used to their show cages, and you will find it a good plan to run the birds into these frequently during the latter part of their moult, so that they may be quite accustomed to them when the time arrives for them to be sent to the shows.

Train the Birds Regularly.

For my own part I never allow my birds to lose the habit of moving freely from stock cage to show cage, and vice-versa. There is never a week in the year when my birds do not spend some time in their show cages. Every week each stock cage is thoroughly overhauled and cleaned, and during these operations the bird is transferred to its show cage, and the cage placed in a show case, which, of course, is left open. If this is done regularly, you will have no difficulty when the show season arrives.

It will also be advisable when the shows are in progress to give the birds the same hop from perch to perch as they get in their show cages, and it is also important that the perches in the respective cages should be similar in size and shape, as these precautions will prevent any clumsiness in taking the perches.

When paying a visit to a show it is easy to discover the birds which have not received this training. I have frequently seen birds put low down and even out of the prize list owing to this lack of training and consequent bad carriage. In some cases, especially with Britishers, the birds even refuse to take the perches, preferring to run to and fro on the cage-bottom, or to spend a large portion of their time clinging to the front wires. With proper training, however, these faults may be remedied, and the birds will thus stand a much better chance of getting into the award list.

When the time arrives for sending your birds to the shows you will find that this part of your hobby furnishes yet another instance of that "glorious uncertainty" which makes hybrid breeding such a fascinating pastime. Here again, however, much can be done to enhance your chances of winning.

Show your birds to the very best advantage. No matter how good a specimen you may possess, it will look better and smarter in a suitable cage than in an ugly cage, where it cannot be seen to the best advantage. Send out your birds, then, in properly fitted show cages of the latest pattern, and stage them as faultlessly as possible. I send out all my birds in cages of the British Bird and Mule Club pattern, with exteriors enamelled black, and wires and interiors either holly-green or mid-green. The outside of drinker should be black.

Pay a visit to one or two of the larger shows, and learn for yourself how the big winners stage their exhibits. I have paid several visits to the great Crystal Palace show, and have found these visits an education in themselves. I hope on some future occasion to write some reminiscences of these Palace visits.

I am not in favour of overshadowing one's birds, and unless one possesses a big team on which to ring the changes, I consider six or seven shows enough in any one season, which means sending out your team about once a fortnight.

Assist the Secretaries.

Enter your birds early, as late entries are a source of great annoyance to secretaries, causing inconvenience and mistakes. Before sending off your team to a show see that your cage labels are tied on firmly and correctly and that each bird is put into its proper cage according to class and number. Always forward them by such trains as will enable them to reach the hall the night previous to the show, as this will give them time to settle down before judging time arrives.

I would warn young beginners not to expect too great results from their early efforts. It should be remembered that "Rome was not built in a day," and the successful exhibition of birds is only achieved by long practical experience. Learn to take your wins and losses in the same good spirit. We should not be too hasty in our criticisms of the judge's awards, nor should we assume that we know all his motives. By all means criticise his awards if you think he has made mistakes, but let your criticisms be fair, and at least give him credit for having done his work honestly and conscientiously. Judges, after all, are merely human, and like the Mayor of Slocum-on-Mud, they sometimes make mistakes. Above all show your birds honestly. Do not let your desire to finish on top lead you to act fraudulently.

In conclusion, if there are any among my readers who are in search of a hobby I can thoroughly recommend Hybrid breeding as a delightful pastime, extremely fascinating, and one which will provide plenty of healthy and enjoyable excitement. You will find in the pursuit of it plenty to amuse, to interest, and to instruct you, and when at last you have reached the goal of your ambition, and the living hybrid stands before you—a result of all your labours—your joy will be such as is never known to the man who buys his winners.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

The Master Singer of the Canary Tribe

By J. TOMLINSON.

How to Keep the Roller Canary in health, to breed for pleasure and profit, and train for exhibition.

IT may appear to be a little peculiar, but many birds will sing better at a certain period of the day; some will sing their best in the morning, others in the afternoon or evening, while there appears to be a settled condition with all birds, that is, they will sing quieter and steadier in a subdued light.

There appears to be no end to the different ways of bringing the tours. I recall to mind two birds that sang in one style quite classical deliveries. The first one commenced with a bass roll, hollow roll, hollow bell Schockel, Glucke, water roll, and flutes, yet when it became excited it would soar away from the Schockel to a piercing bell, and terminate with sharp flutes. The second bird was a steady singer in its normal condition, taking the succession of the tours calmly and evenly, but upon hearing the shrill challenging call notes of another bird it would break the sequence and flounder with the remaining portion of the song.

Faults Almost Inevitable.

Others will be found that will sing their faulty tours in or about the middle of their song, while again others will commence well and end badly, that is, they bring their faulty tours at the end of their song, and this is the least objectionable way a fault can be delivered. It will be a very difficult matter indeed to obtain one that has a good variety of tours and rolls and does not sing something faulty, but see to it that the mellowness of tone—a condition not always confined to the deep-toned singer—the number, and quality of the good tours compensate for the faulty passages or passages.

It is hardly necessary to say that it is desirable the tutor should have a well-connected delivery, for youngsters endeavour to copy their tutor's style of singing. That all do not "make good" in this respect is evident from the number of incoherent songsters to be met with, even on the show bench. Should it be desirable to purchase a tutor, the best time as a rule will be after the show season has commenced, that is, in the autumn and early winter months. The early bred youngsters will then be forward with their song, and a year old or an old bird will then be easier to procure than at the approach of the breeding season, there being always a ready sale for all well-bred stock. An old or an over year bird is more reliable than a youngster, for it is not an uncommon occurrence for the latter to leave out of its song one or more tours; sometimes this will occur while under tuition.

I am only able to quote one instance of youngsters not being placed under tuition until the schoolmaster had gone through the moult. In this case the old bird had been used very freely in the breeding cage, and was not singing in its best form just at the required time. Rather than allow the youngsters to hear this song, the owner preferred to wait until the bird had moulted, and tuition did not commence until October, when the bird's song was steadier, and not so loud as previous to the moult.

Naturally the youngsters were rather late in attaining their full song, but the forbearance on the owner's part was amply repaid, as it proved one of the best years he experienced on the show bench. Without further evidence it would be very difficult to say whether it would be wise to follow the plan generally, but that the pupils turned out well in this case was proved from the fact that, after being on rail for over twenty hours, they were well up in the prizes at the provincial show held at Belle Vue in 1910.

I believe that youngsters should be placed under the schoolmaster early after leaving the breeding room, and, as I have previously intimated, it will be advantageous to the pupils should the tutor retain his song during the moulting season. He should be placed, for preference, in a low position, or underneath the youngsters, so that his song will be easily recognisable to them.

The Place for the Tutors.

It is advisable that the tutor should be kept in the song cage and cabinet, or in a shutter-cage. Whether he should remain constantly in the training room must necessarily be left to each fancier's convenience. Perchance some are away from home all day and in such a case I would advise that the tutor's cage be opened for a short period in the morning for, say, about half-an-hour, and again in the evening, and that between these intervals he be removed from the training room, his cage doors kept closed. If one of the members of the household can be prevailed upon to repeat the operation about mid-day, it would be beneficial.

Where convenience will not allow the above instructions to be followed, the bird must necessarily remain in the training room constantly, and be opened to full daylight when convenient, but this method would tend to have a detrimental effect on the old bird's song. The calls of the young cocks offer an inducement for it to commence singing, thus causing it to sing more than is necessary.

A Ringed Bullfinch Caught.

Sir, I have to day caught a young cock Bullfinch with a ring on one of its legs. I make the wording and number on ring to be: "Aberdeen M UNIV 223." It will be interesting to know through CAGE BIRDS where the bird was rung.

Sons and Whole of Staff Gone to the Front.

Sir, Would it be asking too much for you to kindly intimate that my cage-making, etc., works are closed, the whole of my employees, including my two sons, having gone to the front. I offered my own services, but although a trained man, my age, 63, was against me. I trust you will oblige me, and I hope to advertise again in better days.

To Trap Slugs and Snails.

Sir, In this week's CAGE BIRDS I notice a correspondent wants to know of a trap for slugs and snails; here are two:—Place some cabbage leaves flat on the ground at night with a little bran sprinkled under them. Those garden pests will be found under the leaves in the morning, and can be disposed of. Another way is: Rub some lard or dripping on one side of cabbage leaves, and then place them on the ground, turning the rubbed side underneath. I think these will be found satisfactory.

An Appeal to Stand Firm.

Sir, The panic that is overtaking some societies is regrettable. Can't they see that they are playing into the enemy's hands in postponing and abandoning their fixtures? If the enemy can see that he has made such an impression as to cause the entire overthrow of our domestic system, it will give him and his army as big a fillip, and be as good a tonic to them as a good substantial feed of real cow beef. Do, for goodness sake, let us go on as if nothing were happening. Let us show him that we are so confident of success that we are not abandoning our hobbies. It will be as big a blow to him as if he were hit by a shell from one of his own siege guns. If the wholesale abandoning of fixtures is going to be persisted in, fanciers will sell out, and the Fancy will receive such a blow that it will be years before it recovers from the wound. Manchester's decision is to be regretted. Can't its members in their wisdom conceive some way out of the impasse?

T. JOHNSON.

How Did Birds Originate?

Sir, I am afraid that Mr. Johnson takes rather much on himself when he assumes I am cornered. It would take much better arguments than those put forth by Mr. Johnson to "corner" me. But, might I ask Mr. Johnson, now that he has heard some of the arguments for evolution, to prove that birds and reptiles are not related? After he has done this, I will be pleased to give him a few more reasons for evolution. If animals suffered from indigestion natural selection would weed them out. Also, is not ten per cent a very large percentage as compared with the lower animals?

R. MAXWELL SAVAGE.

Sir, If it will suit Mr. H. Panton better I will alter my remarks to the following: "I have proved over and over again that I am years (instead of 'streets') ahead of Dr. Butler and Mr. Silver as a reliable ornithologist." I agree with Mr. Panton that my letter in your issue of August 15th should give the evolution theory its death blow, as my information was taken from the highest authority on the subject, and it confirms my own observations. Mr. Panton's remarks are highly complimentary to the power of my observations.

JOHN CRAIG.

Beith.

Sir, Mr. McLean sums the controversy up in a nutshell. The theorists have not advanced an argument in favour of their beliefs, and have made a poor show indeed. It is a matter of faith to them—the scientists have spoken, and it is so! But with me it is not sufficient for a scientist to say a thing is so. I want to know how he has formed his impressions, and when his theories fail to satisfy legitimate curiosity, he can't blame us for being sceptical.

I am sorry you saw fit to ask Mr. Savage to refrain from answering my questions on 'the evolution of the horse.' Both you and he may have thought that it was an exhibition of ignorance on my part, but I intended it to be. I am quite aware of the accepted theory, but it has always seemed a funny thing to me how different species—which the scientists tell us sprang from one common stock—should be living to day under exactly the same circumstances, yet one has adapted itself to those circumstances and the other has not. I could go farther with this argument, but, in face of your dictum, I have no other course but to refrain.

T. JOHNSON.

Sir, Darwin maintained that all the birds on the face of the earth were descended from one pair or a few pairs of birds. This is not "after their kind." Now it is stated that birds evolved from reptiles; neither is this "after their kind." The above is also another change of front. It is amusing to hear some of the ideas of evolutionists. An evolutionist told me that it took a million years to make a species, and when the Cuckoo began to deposit its eggs in other birds' nests; it had three toes before and one behind; it turned one of the front toes to the back, and then it reduced the size of its eggs. Another evolutionist said there was no such thing as species; and yet another stated there were millions of species.

I endorse Mr. A. McLean's remarks that theories and speculations about the origin of birds will ever remain worthless unless they resolve themselves into the web of life's experience, and that Darwin, Wallace, Huxley, Spencer, etc., have never given us anything better than the Creation story in Genesis, nor as good.

I am well aware that evolutionists maintain that it takes many thousands of years to make big changes in living creatures. I am not disputing whether it takes a long or a short period to make supposed fundamental changes in reptiles or birds. So I am labouring under no delusion. My contention is that it has never been proved that birds evolved from reptiles. I would like to point out that coloured figures of birds, geese, Hoopoes, etc., have been found on frescoes discovered in an Egyptian temple that must be nearly 5,000 years old, and that they are faithful representations of the species at the present day.

I was also pleased to see Mr. A. Thurley's remarks on the subject. When I read the editor's prize scheme for the encouragement of fanciers to produce new varieties of Canaries, Hybrids, etc., I wondered if he would give further prizes to those who may have a notion to try and breed varieties between a Hybrid and any other species, or to produce varieties between two Hybrids. However, I consider the Editor's offer the best he has ever made, and I hope he will extend it over future years.

JOHN CRAIG.

A Slander Repudiated.

Sir, It has reached me that some one in London has been reporting that I am a German. I should like to say that I am not. I belong to an old Devonshire family. My father was in the British Navy, and my grandfather, his father, also served 40 years in the British navy, and was chief gunner on the H.M.S. Excellent for many years. Reference to an old Navy list would prove this. I think it is a dirty, low down trick to say such a thing at these times. If you would kindly publish this I should be glad.

Portsmouth's Secretary will Brighten Local Hospitals.

Sir, I am pleased to think that your Hospital Canary scheme will be a success, and when I can find time to tackle our Canary members I trust to get a few birds for our local hospitals. I might say that unfortunately we have been obliged to convert two of our secondary schools into Army Hospitals, besides having the fixed Army Hospital on Portsdown Hill, which covers roughly forty acres, and the local infirmary for the most severe cases. You see we are a base for both Army and Navy, and only last Sunday we had two special trains of wounded come in.

"Business As Usual" at Reading.

Sir, At the meeting of the Reading and Dis. C.B.S., held last Wednesday, it was decided to hold open show as usual, so we hope fanciers will keep November 11th in their mind, and give us as much support as they can. We are also willing to spend £1 5s. in advertising same in CAGE BIRDS, so you can put it in the list of shows fixed.

Brandon Colliery C.B.S. "Without Fear."

Sir, At a monthly meeting held in the Workmen's Social Club, Sept. 5, it was decided to still run our open show, which is fixed for Jan. 23. With the good support we have offered us we shall pull through without fear. Three of our members have joined the Colours, viz., Wm. Bacey, chairman; Wm. Hunter, junr.; and M. Bailes. They have left their birds in the care of other members until their return. Our best wishes be with them all.

No Halls Available in Glasgow.

Sir, We very much regret to inform you that the executive of the City of Glasgow Ornithological Association, owing to the war crisis, have decided to postpone their annual (61st) show indefinitely. This decision was only arrived at after great reluctance and consideration, but in view of the fact that all suitable halls in Glasgow are reserved for Government purposes, no other course was left open. Thanking you for past kindnesses and favours, we are,

Burton-on-Trent C.B.S. Will Come Up Smiling.

Sir, At a meeting held Sept. 1, New Inn, Mr. Hathaway presided over an average attendance. After minutes and correspondence the question arose as to the advisability of holding the open show, and after a very lengthy discussion it was decided to cancel the show, owing to the present crisis. Seeing that Burton is the mobilising centre for the Midlands, and the railways are used at week-ends for Military purposes, the Committee had no alternative, which they very much regret, but if opportunity presents itself later they will endeavour to come up smiling and try to carry out the country's motto—"Business as usual."

An L. and P.O.S. Show for the Fanciers of London.

Sir, The London and Provincial O.S., at a special committee meeting held last Thursday, decided to hold a show the last week in October or the first week in November, with competition open to all fanciers who can deliver and fetch their birds to and from the show by hand or carrier. In consequence of information given by the railway companies they (the committee) cannot accept the responsibility of dispatching birds by the London railways. A special effort is being made to secure a hall on a route well served by trams and motor buses. Packages are carried on the trams on the drivers' platforms, and this convenience should help exhibitors.

Bradford National Charity Show

An Appeal to Local Fanciers.

Sir, At our last meeting it was decided to call together all the fanciers in the Bradford district to see what steps should be taken with regard to this year's National show, in view of the present crisis. Those present seemed to be of the opinion that the public would have so many calls for subscriptions to relief funds that our subscriptions would fall off considerably, and the working-man fancier would not be in a financial position to support the show with good entries. Then there is the question of carriage of birds. Will the railway companies be able to undertake live stock carrying? However, it rests with the fanciers, and we hope to have a good gathering on Wed., Sept. 16, at the Market Tavern, at 8 p.m., when all will have an opportunity of expressing an opinion. Those unable to be present would greatly oblige if they would send a post card expressing their views.

Sir, The open show of the Kelty and Blairadam C.B.A. has been postponed through the condition of the country, and also through myself being called up with the Home Hospital Reserve. The Excellent Scheme of the Clapham C.B.A.

Sir, At a meeting of the Clapham and Dis. C.B.A., held Sept. 1, it was announced that the Chairman had secured Strathblane Hall, Clapham Junction, for the autumn show, to be held on October 14 and 15. The schedule will contain about 45 classes. The object of this Association in extending the hospitality of its organisation to all who will bring their birds is to secure for London fanciers, at any rate, another opportunity to exhibit their birds, and although all indications point to a possible loss, the Association is prepared to face that loss in an endeavour to advance the interests of the Fancy. I should like, however, to urge all members who have not attended the meetings lately to send their contributions to the special prize list to the secretary without delay.

A. R. COE.

Portsmouth Hope it is Postponement Only.

Sir, At a special meeting of the Portsmouth and Southern Counties Cage Bird Society, it was decided to abandon the annual open show for 1914, and at a later date to consider the feasibility of having a show early in the New Year. The War was the sole reason of the abandonment, and those fanciers who reside in garrison towns will realise more fully perhaps than others the impossibility of holding shows whilst the War lasts. We hope, however, to have a series of table shows in order that the members may keep in touch with the Fancy, and it is fully recognised that only by keeping together shall we be able to have a bumper show next year. We have one committee-man doing his bit on the "Fearless" in the North Sea, two others on active service in the Army, and two other members called up. Personally, I am working from 6.15 a.m. till 9 p.m., Sundays included, and I have been obliged to liberate some of the more delicate softbills that I had succeeded in obtaining this last season.

G. T. HALL, Hon. Sec.

An Appeal to Newcastle Fanciers.

Sir, At a meeting held on Thursday the members of the Newcastle C.B.S. decided to cancel the open show fixed for Oct. 23 and 24. We have quite a number of very good reasons for doing so. We decided to hold a show later on. There was a suggestion put forward for each member to give a Canary to be sold for the benefit of the Lord Mayor's War Fund. I shall be pleased to receive promises from anyone, whether members of our Society or not. We wish to get 100 or more. Now, Newcastle fanciers, rally round and let us do something to help to relieve the sufferings of those dear ones whom our brave lads have left behind. Remember, they have gone to fight for you and all; aye, for the very existence of our nation; and we who cannot be with them must do something, however little, to assist their wives and children. E. Lothian C.B.S. Unanimous.

Sir,—A special meeting of the East Lothian C.B.S. was held on Sept. 4 to consider whether we were to hold our open show, notwithstanding the national crisis. After some discussion it was unanimously decided to hold our annual open show as usual on Oct. 17, hoping that fanciers who supported us in the past will do so in the future. The next meeting will be to appoint another judge in room of Mr. Bruce (Coldstream), who has been called up for active service.

Manchester Will Hold a Show.

Sir,—I beg to inform you that at a meeting of the Manchester and N.C.O.S., on Sept. 7, the question of our postponed Open Show came up for discussion. It was decided that we hold an Open Show on a smaller scale than usual, viz., a one-day show in a smaller hall and with reduced classification. To avoid clashing with any other Society we purpose holding this show on Oct. 31, one of the days previously fixed for our show. Further particulars will be announced later. I hope fanciers will do their best to support this show.

COLINTON & CURRIE PARISHES.

Meeting, Village Hall, Juniper Green, Sept. 5. President (Mr. Begbie) in the chair. It was unanimously decided to go on with annual show as usual on Nov. 7. Mr. Gibson was present and kindly presented us with a cup. Mr. Begbie, on behalf of the Society, thanked Mr. Gibson for his kindness, and it was decided to give the cup for the best bird bred by a novice, a novice to be one who has never won a first prize. Decided to drop the old bird classes this year, and Mr. Begbie hoped members would get as many specials as possible. Next meeting Oct. 3.—Jas. Napier, Sec.

NEW CROSS C.B.S.

Meeting headquarters Sept. 3, Mr. H. C. Humphries presiding over a good number of members. After discussion it was decided to hold the annual show as arranged, and the drawing up of the schedule was proceeded with and a number of specials promised. The rest of the evening was given up to questions and answers, which proved very entertaining and instructive. At next meeting, Oct. 1, there will be a washing demonstration and competition, and we hope members will bring a bird even if they don't intend to go in for the competition.—Burton Bros., Hon. Secs.

BLAYDON-ON-TYNE C.B.S.

Meeting Sept. 5, with a good turn-out of members, who fully discussed whether to hold an annual show or not. It was ultimately decided that owing to the uncertainty of getting hall (the hall having been promised, if needed, for the wounded soldiers or sailors), and also the likelihood of not getting the usual support that we abandon the show for the present season. I may say that there is great disappointment among the members as to the way that things have turned, as there was every prospect of a record show.—G. Havver, Hon. Sec.

STOKE-ON-TRENT C.B.A.

Meeting Sept. 7. Decided that points for tea service and medal competition should be counted in separate classes where possible. Mr. F. W. Alecock leads with 16 points; Messrs. Leese and Davis tie for second place with 13 points. The open show fixed for Nov. 19th came up for consideration, and after a thorough discussion it was felt advisable to abandon it this season. A suggestion was made that we try to arrange a series of inter-club shows amongst the members of the four North Staffordshire societies and with this object in view the secretary was instructed to ascertain the opinion of the local clubs on the matter.—J. Pitchford.

LANCS. AND LIZARD F.A.

Special meeting, Newmarket Hotel, Manchester, one of the best for some time. After ordinary business was gone through, we had Mr. Bradley's scheme up for discussion. It was decided that in face of the present crisis it was not advisable to put the trophy up for competition for this season, as it would possibly be a big struggle for some of the members to show at all, and they would be put under a big disadvantage beside their more fortunate brethren. It was, however, decided that the points gained in 1915 and 1916 and 1916 and 1917 be counted, and the member with the highest number of points win the trophy. There will also most likely be a good prize for second and third points. It had originally been intended for the trophy to be in the form of a gold watch, value £10 10s., but as Mr. Bradley said it was quite possible the prize might be won by a member who would prefer the value in cash, it was left open for the winner to have the choice of cash or a trophy, and instead of one prize the £10 10s. will be divided into three prizes, which will be decided upon later. Our members will be sorry to hear that besides Manchester it has been decided to abandon Sheffield show as well, so that means two of our patronage shows going down. Liverpool, I am pleased to hear, intend going on with their show, and as our spangled beauties are once again being catered for, it is to be hoped that members will reward the pluck of the officials with a bumping entry. It was left in the hands of the Sec. to call a meeting if required, but up to the present there is no necessity for same.—John Rukin, Hon. Sec.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE C.B.S.

General meeting, Sept. 3, Purves Cafe, with a splendid turn-out of members. Mr. T. C. Crawhall chair. Correspondence read from Mr. G. Curry re Cambridge Hall for open show. We cannot get the use of this hall owing to it being made into a military hospital. Letters were read from the judges: Messrs. J. Robson, J. F. Dewar, G. Brown, A. Holden and J. Stewart. After a discussion we reluctantly came to the conclusion to cancel the open show this year; it was decided to hold a members' show, the date to be fixed later, and to ask the Northern Specialist Societies to grant their patronage. It was suggested by Mr. Tindale that the members be each asked to contribute a Canary towards the Lord Mayor's War Fund. I shall be pleased to receive promises from anyone, whether members or not; the birds will be sold, and the cash received will go to swell the War Fund.—J. W. Reed.

SHEFFIELD O.S.

Meeting, headquarters, Rose and Crown Hotel, Sept. 1, Mr. T. Dawn presiding. Unfortunately the business of the evening was not of a very pleasing character, owing to the European crisis. Instead of making arrangements for an all-England show we had to consider whether it was not advisable to proceed with arrangements or cancel the fixture for 1914 altogether. Eventually it was unanimously decided that we abandon the fixture for this year. The Government have taken over the Corn Exchange, the hall taken for the show, and are using it for a recruiting station, and I hear afterwards going to fit it up as a hospital. We trust that the specialist clubs and our patrons will all rally round us in 1915, when we hope that the country will be in a more settled state and things will work smoothly. Apologising to the Fancy at large for the disappointment we shall cause by taking this step.—J. A. T. Woodall, Press Correspondent.

Annual general meeting, club room, Maxwell-rd., Sept. 3. Owing to the war the meeting was not fully attended. Sec. read report for the year, which showed the Society to be in a good position, with a balance in hand of £3. The annual show, held at Park Farm on Nov. 26, was the finest show they had yet held, both in numbers and quality. Thanks are due to Messrs. Everitt, Brickell, Carter, Collier, Sparks and Franklin, who worked hard to make the show a success; also to the ladies who kindly provided refreshments, etc. It was resolved to hold the next annual show at Park Farm on Nov. 11 and 12, but that it would be policy, owing to the present crisis, to make it only partly an open show, and to add more members' classes. Several letters were read and the Sec. advised to deal with same. The usual votes of thanks concluded the meeting. Annual membership subscription, 2s. 6d.—P. J. Barnes, Hon. Sec., Maxwell rd., Northwood.

RATS!

A Tale That Didn't Wash.

Joseph Saunders and Benjamin Saunders, his brother, were summoned at Bromley on Aug. 24 for using a net for the purposes of snaring wild birds in a field, contrary to the Wild Birds Protection Order (Aug., 1912). Joseph Saunders pleaded not guilty. The other defendant did not appear.—P.C. 178P stated that while on duty at Ruxley Hill he was informed that two men were in a brickfield near by acting in a suspicious manner. Witness went to the field, and one of the men ran away; the other said he was only catching a few rats. At the station he admitted he was catching Linnets. Witness afterwards saw the brother and told him he would be reported for a summons. He replied, "The nets are not mine, but my brother's."—Prisoner denied having said that he was after Linnets. He was trying to catch rats. The Chairman (Mr. J. W. Wheeler-Bennett): But the nets are the kind used for catching birds. Defendant: Yes, I admit that; but they are as good for catching rats as birds. The Chairman said the Bench believed that the defendants were in the field for the purpose of catching wild birds. If they were summoned again they would be severely dealt with, but in this case they would only have to pay the costs—8s. in the case of the first defendant, and 10s. in the case of the second.

CLUB REPORTS—Continued from overleaf.

RUNCORN B.B.A.

Meeting held at headquarters on Sept. 4, Mr. Jos. Guy in the chair, and a large attendance of members. It was decided to hold a members' show, Dec. 5th, Mr. Leigh, Warrington, to judge.—E. Rone, Sec.

SOUTHAMPTON P.P. AND C.B.A.

Meeting held Bedford Hotel, Sept. 2, Mr. Stables chair. Revised rules passed for printing. After full discussion it was unanimously decided to abandon the open show this year; principal causes being, hall has been taken by military, railway continually liable to be held up, and general local distress.—G. J. Slade.

FIFE AND KINROSS N.P.C.

Members please note that I wrote to the President when I was called up, explaining my position. He has replied saying he does not think there is any need for the club this year, with which I agree. I expect he will call a meeting shortly, when you can all give your own opinions of what to do in the matter. I will look for further instructions. Wishing you all well.—Pte. A. Dickson, Military Hospital, Glencorse, Midlothian.

NATIONAL BRITISH BIRD & M.C.

Meeting July 30. Patronage was granted to the following shows: Bristol, Watford, Newcastle, Manchester, Wembleton, Cheltenham, Sheffield, Leyton, Nottingham, Portsmouth, Southend, Stoke, Bradford, Gateshead, Scottish National, Doncaster, and Llanelly.—J. P. Carr, Hon. Sec.

[Since the above meeting, notice of which has only just come to hand, some of the shows to which patronage has been granted have been cancelled.—Ed. C.B.]

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S.

Meeting held Sept 1-14, at headquarters, Reindeer Hotel, Rye Lane, Peckham, Mr. Frank Cole in the chair. This fixture was for a lecture on the Yorkshire, but unfortunately no one appeared available for this date. The Chairman suggested that some member should give us a few words, and Mr. A. J. Clarke kindly consented. His advice to a novice was very striking, and he gave some valuable hints as to the best methods of obtaining good birds, also as to suitable cages and general management. A discussion followed, many taking part, and some good arguments resulted. A vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Clarke for kindly volunteering his remarks, and a pleasant evening closed.—A. G. Cant, Hon. Sec.

The Shows.

LEEDS C.B.S.

Third of the four table shows for the Hattersley cruets, Yorks. and Norwich sections, Sep. 5. Entries did not come up to the usual standard, owing to the birds being deep in the moult. Mr. H. Chew judged, and gave entire satisfaction.

YORKS. (5): 1, 3, vhc, Norton; 2, 4, Baldwinson. NOR. (7): 1, 2, Baldwinson; 3, Norton; 4, vhc, hc, e, Wilson. DOUGLAS N.B.

Show held under the auspices of the Douglas Horticultural Society, Public School, Sept. 4. The bird fancy has gone down a good deal since the winter show was allowed to lapse, and we are pleased an effort is being made to revive the interest again. The entry was not very large, but quality was superior throughout. Mr. Thos. Ritchie, Lesmahagow, judged, and his awards were well received. SCOTCH FANCY: 1, Watson, rare good cl. yell., good top end and drive, excellent style. HEN: 1, Watson, cl. yell., nice subs., good shoulder and drive, full of qual. BORD., CL. OR TKD. CK. Questions and Answers.

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS

- (1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and conclude with either the correct name or a pseudonym.
- (2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query.
- (3)—Queries intended for different specialists must not be written on the same sheet of paper.
- (4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions or advertisements, or any other matter for publication.
- (5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated on the left-hand corner of the query.
- (6)—If an answer in the same week's issue is desired queries must be posted to reach us by Monday's first post at latest.
- (7)—If an answer by post is desired from our specialists, a postal order for sixpence must accompany any query relating to sickness of birds, or a shilling in ordinary enquiries, with a stamped and addressed envelope in either case. Dead birds must not be sent to the office (see Post-mortems).
- (8)—All who desire letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence. All the fees received from this source will be handed over in full to the "Referee's" Poor Children's Fund (London).
- (9)—All queries must be addressed to the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Postcards are not admissible.

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must, of course, be sent to the Editor.

Canaries.—Claude St. John, British Birds, Mules, and Hybrids.—H. Norman, Foreign Birds.—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Wild Bird Life.—H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc., of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Borders, Scotch, or any other variety of Canary, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his questions for answer to some leading specialist on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

ACCOMMODATION (S. T. Jones).—The height is not sufficient to be of any value in your case. The floor space is all that should count, and if you have the flight made 11in. wide it will accommodate from eight to ten birds the size of a Norwich Canary. If 16in. wide you may keep from twelve to sixteen. In either case you must see that the floor is kept clean and well sanded, or covered with a layer of clean pine sawdust.

WILL THEY BE FIT? (Dickie).—(1) You do not give enough particulars about the Yorkshire cock to make it sure what is the trouble with him. It would have been useful pos., good col. and feather; 3, J. Jones. NOR. (2): 1, not in catalogue, good size and shape, nice head and neck, rich col.; 2, G. Jones, typical, nice size, good wings and tail, close up. MULE (3): 1, J. O. Roberts, good size and col. Goldie-Bullie; 2, J. Hughes, well known Goldie Mule; 3, R. Hughes, good Linnet, often noted. GOLDF. (3): 1, E. Jones, good size and col., rich flush face, grand width of skull, nice tan and markings; 2, Lewis and Pritchard, nice size, good body and tan, rich blaze, sound Finch; 3, R. Thomas, typical, nice face, bars and buttons. A.O. BRIT. (1): 1, Lewis and Pritchard, good Yellow Bunting, capital size, rich col. LOCAL (3): 1, J. Hughes; 2, Mary E. Jones; 3, Blodwen Jones.

if you had said whether he was in a plump or emaciated condition. Try what a week or two of the following treatment will do for him, and if not considerably better in, say, a month, write again and repeat all particulars, and give the above information. See that he is not exposed to direct cold draughts, nor the fumes of burning lights in the evenings. See that the perches are of a proper size and well fitting, and examine his claws to see whether they are overgrown, and if this is the case cut them back to a proper length. In addition to the staple diet of plain canary seed give half a teaspoonful of summer rape every other day, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion and four of sherry mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed. Give a little green food, or half ripe wild seeds daily. In the drinking water add as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and ten drops of lemon juice daily for three days. After this give instead five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, and sweet spirit of nitre every second day for a fortnight. (2) Yes, the young cocks that were bred in June last will be quite fit for breeding next season if they keep in good health and are robust. The fact that they do not yet sing is of no importance provided they are really cocks. Many young cocks make no serious efforts at singing until the end of the following January after they are hatched.

A QUESTION OF DIET (A. M. J., Cricklewood).—(1) Liberal feeding during the moult is not very likely to do any harm. It is later on, during the winter months, that it is more likely to prove detrimental, on account of the birds having no particular drain or tax on the system at that time. When the moult is over give a staple diet of plain canary seed only. In addition give separately every second day an allowance of half a teaspoonful of summer rape per bird, and on the intervening days give once a week a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, and teazle, and on one other day a small teaspoonful of egg-food per bird, or an equivalent quantity of bread and milk, or other soft food. As long as the weather is mild and open give a spray of watercress, or other green-stuff, three times a week, and at other times substitute a morsel of banana, sweet apple, or raw or boiled carrot. Give as much space as you can for exercise. Hens may be kept in groups in large flights. Glad to hear the advice given last spring has proved so successful to you. (2) As regards treatment of injured bird, you would doubtless find what you require at either of these places:—M. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow; Mr. H. Gray, M.R.C.V.S., 23, Upper Phillimore Place, W.; or Mr. H. Vale, Norwood Junction, S.W.

A TENDERFOOT (E. Lockhart).—(1) The tender feet are probably a natural effect of the moult. Keep the perches as clean as possible, and see they are of a proper size and shape, and of a nice soft wood. Catch bird, and bathe feet daily for a few minutes in a warm solution of boracic acid—a teaspoonful of the acid in a saucerful of warm water—then dry gently and anoint with zine ointment. Add a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea, and ten drops of lemon juice to the drinking water for three consecutive days, and afterwards substitute 20 drops of chemical food every second day for a fortnight. See that bird is kept under healthful conditions. (2) It does not follow that because a bird eats all one kind of seed and rejects other kinds that it ought to have only the kind it eats given it. Your staple diet is correct. You should make it eat more canary by not renewing the supply as soon as all the rape has been picked out. Let it remain until at least a good portion of the canary has been consumed. See reply to "A.M.J.," Cricklewood, and feed the bird the same, minus the separate supply of rape, and retaining your present staple of canary and rape mixed together.

PICKS HIS FEATHERS (Dick, Preston).—I am strongly inclined to think that the bird is troubled with red mites, notwithstanding what you say about his apparent freedom from them. The fact of his being on full song is not by any means a criterion that he is not troubled with this pest. Thoroughly examine the cage, especially about the perch ends, and in any cracks or open joints that may be about it, probing them with a pin or to a sheet of white paper if necessary. If any mites are found see that they are thoroughly exterminated in the first instance. Then treat the bird for a month in anticipation of the moult, the same as advised to "H. R." in this issue, when the bird will probably come through the moult in good plumage and condition.

HEN SINGING, ETC. (F. E. Mather).—(1) There was nothing at all unusual in the cock refusing to assist in the building of the nest, or in incubation. This is the usual thing, though exceptional specimens will sometimes "lend a hand" more or less. You should have tried leaving the cock with the hen again for the third brood this season, when she refused to feed the second brood without him. (2) It is a little unusual for a hen to sing so well as you say yours has begun to do, but it is not very rare. There are very exceptional cases where the hen will rival some cocks. (3) If singing qualities are your aim you cannot do better than get Seifert Rollers to mate with your own birds, and preferably of a strain which is bred and trained to sing a similar type of song. Thus, if your bird is trained to excel in deep, hollow rolls, you should introduce only birds from a strain excelling in this type of song, and so on with other song tours.

BALD AND SCURFY HEN (A. A., St. Lukes).—The hen seems to be in a bad way, and is probably thoroughly run down, or played out. See that she is kept in healthful and bright surroundings, free from direct cold draughts, extremes of heat and cold, or the fumes of burning lights in the evenings, and see also that the cage is quite free from red mites, and keep it well strewn with clean, gritty sand. Stop feeding on soaked seed. For the next fortnight give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape, and every second day give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of cherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed, and on the alternate days give a spray of watercress and add to the drinking water 20 drops of whisky, and five each of ipecacuanha wine and eucalyptus oil, and shake well together. At the end of this fortnight's treatment go on to the treatment advised to "H. R." in this issue, and continue this for two or three weeks, but in your case omit the saffron and substitute instead ten drops of fluid magnesia. This will give the bird the best chance of moulting out into good condition. Stop putting anything on the skin. The substance near the eye may ultimately develop into a tumour, or it may disappear under the treatment advised. In any case do not interfere with it.

SEED SAMPLES (W. C.).—Only one sample of seed reached me—the summer rape, which is of good size, and has the appearance of being well matured, but its very palpable infestation with mites did not tempt me to test its quality beyond external appearances. I have referred to this form of infestation many times in the past in CAGE BIRDS, but have not met with a case for some time now. I consider the seed totally unfit for feeding any class of Canaries. I have been looking for specimens of this particular mite for some time, and should be obliged if you would be good enough to forward me a small quantity of the most "alive" portion of the seed, through the Editor, packed in a small box to prevent it being battered in transit. Perhaps if you enclosed a sample of the seed to the vendor with a polite note drawing his attention to its condition he might meet you in some way.

MAKES CHUCKLING NOISE (H. R.).—As you say the bird has shed only a few feathers it has evidently had its moult checked, which might easily explain its condition. Keep it fairly warm, but do not overheat it, and allow it to bathe as freely as it likes. Give a staple diet of plain canary seed only. In addition give separately every third day a morsel of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut, soaked in cold milk, drained, dusted with flowers of sulphur, and finally soft sugar. On the intervening days give first half a teaspoonful of summer rape and a morsel of banana, and next a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts millet, niger, teazle, broken groats, and maw, and a little green food. In the drinking water add every second day for a fortnight as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence, and five drops of syrup of saffron.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

THE RED LINNET (Barney, Longton).—The "Red Linnet" is simply the ordinary Linnet with a red breast. This colour it acquires during the breeding season. The plumage of all birds undergoes a change in the spring: in some species it is much more decided than in others. In the case of the Linnet he not only puts on a crimson breast but his beak changes from a light pinkish tinge to a dark blue grey. When moulted in captivity, the Linnet only becomes a little richer in plumage as the spring advances, and does not assume the red breast, although the beak changes colour in the same way as when the bird is at liberty. The Linnet is a distinct species, and is one of the Finches.

LINNET MATTERS (Caumbina).—Although a heated kitchen is hardly the most desirable place to keep a Linnet in during both winter and summer, there are many of them living under such conditions. What you must do is to hang the cage as low as possible so that the bird gets plenty of light from the window, and is not affected by the upper air of the room when it is rendered impure by the burning gas. If you can manage to hang him outside during the summer months it would certainly be healthier for him, and even on mild days in the winter, if away from any very rough winds. (2) I have examined your two seed samples and find the mixed seed to be the better of the two, the only objection I have to it is that it contains a rather big percentage of English rape, but you can improve it by adding more canary. I would therefore advise you to use this Finch mixture for stock food, and to every pint of it add a quarter of a pint of best canary you can procure. You do not mention wild food. At this time of the year you should be giving the seeding tops of many wild plants, such as plantain, groundsel, shepherd's purse, grass, and a host of others that are now full of seed. Collect a fresh supply of these daily, it will improve the health of the bird, and lessen your food bill. If you have any more trouble with looseness of the bowels, purchase an ounce of citrate of iron and ammonia from the chemist, and dissolve as much as will cover a sixpence in three tablespoonfuls of water. You will have no trouble to get the bird to drink this. (3) If you are keeping your bird's solely for song, I would advise you to have one in each compartment, with a board between so that they are unable to see each other; you could purchase two or three next month, and keep the most promising.

FEEDING FINCH AND SOFTBILLS (Sam).—You appear to be feeding your young Mules fairly well, excepting that I do not think you are wise in giving the soaked rape so frequently. I am not so fond of using it myself, and much prefer germinated seeds. If you make a mixture of rape, teazel and canary, and keep it damp, it will soon commence to sprout, when it is ready for use. Seed treated in this manner is much easier to digest than dried seeds. If you make this alteration in your feeding and give an occasional pinch of good maw seed, I think you will stop the looseness. Boil the drinking-water and give a small teaspoonful of chemical food in it three times a week; discontinue when he improves in health. A good stock mixture later on would be the following: Canary 3 parts, teazel 2 parts, rape 1 part, hemp and linseed 1/2 part of each. (2) During such weather as we are having, I would certainly advise you to keep your Blackcaps outside. The air and exercise they get in an outside aviary assist their moulting. If well fed, these birds will live and do well outside all the year round; I have had them in song in the coldest weather. (3) You should have no difficulty in distinguishing the sexes, the cock, as you probably know, has a black crown or cap, that of the hen being brown. (4) Your birds are both cocks, and as soon as they are through the moult the young one will break into song; he will warble quietly at first, and gradually get stronger. The song you get from them will be regulated a good deal by the manner in which you treat them.

COLOUR FEEDING CANARY MULE (Delta).—You should have no difficulty in colour feeding your two-year-old Goldfinch-Canary, but I am afraid you have left it rather late. The food should be given just previous to his dropping into moult, so as to get the colouring matter into the system before the new feathers begin to grow. If you purchase the food from a well-known vendor you will find instructions for feeding sent with it. The method is quite simple. A little of the colour food is mixed with some kind of soft food, and a teaspoonful given to the bird daily. The quantity of colour is gradually increased until the full strength is reached, and is continued right through the moult.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

WHAT ARE THEY? (J.W.K.).—Your birds are Common or Red Avadavats (Spice Birds are larger and have blackish beaks and no red in plumage at all). Our Nutshell, "Avadavats," 2d. post free from our manager, would tell you all about them. The males when in full colour have the whole of the plumage scarlet or suffused with the same colour and thickly spotted with white—the intensity of the scarlet varies from a deep coppery red to rich scarlet, and some specimens are more or less splashed with black on the abdomen. The hens have brown-grey upper plumage, red upper tail coverts with the under plumage more or less pale yellowish-buff, and only a few spots, and they retain this plumage all the year round. Diet: Canary, white and Indian millet, millet sprays, greenfood, grit and water. They have been bred fairly frequently in roomy outdoor aviaries. I do not consider it right to keep them with Budgerigars or Lovebirds, as they have not a "fighting chance" if "scraping" occurs. Even though left alone for a time, sooner or later you would be picking them up with bitten wings, legs and feet, or otherwise maimed, not always the result of maliciousness, but more often from Budgerigar mischievousness.

AILING GREY (J.T.W.).—From your remarks I gather that present conditions have been going on for twelve months, and consequently have become more or less chronic, and before I can give you anything like a helpful reply you must answer me the following queries: (1) Full details of its dietary; (2) as near as you can tell, are the falls the result of weakness? (3) Are there any symptoms of fits? In the meantime, on three successive days put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in the drinking water. Boil a little of the maize till soft, drain off all water and then allow half a teaspoonful of cod liver oil emulsion to soak into it—give this daily for the present. Keep cuttlebone and grit in the cage, also a piece of a thick branch with the bark on, fix it in one corner of the cage, securing it top and bottom, at a good slope-up, for the bird to climb about on. If it is tame, exercising outside the cage whenever convenient will greatly benefit it.

AFRICAN GREY PARROT (Perplexed).—I should advise putting this bird in another cage while the present one receives a thorough cleansing. Paint the cages inside and out with neat paraffin, thoroughly searching all crevices, then, after a few hours, well scald it out with boiling water then wash with cold water, and leave in the open, under cover, to dry. When dry it should be distempered inside and enamelled on the exterior according to taste. Give the bird one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia daily in the drinking water till the bowels have been well purged, after this has been achieved only give the magnesia once a week, and on the intermediate days put half a teaspoonful of syrup of phosphates

Many Parrots are very fond of bread and jam, and such in moderation should do them no harm. The Nutshell, "The Grey Parrot," 2d. post free from our manager, would help you greatly as to general management.

INDOOR CAGE (C.E.A.).—Whether you use the cage as a breeder or merely as a stock cage for a mixed series it would be well to make it a foot longer; this addition to be all wood, excepting on the side where it joins on to cage and in lieu of the wire netting put a screen of twiggly branches between the open cage and the added shelter, the birds passing through the twiggly branches to shelter. It would also be well to put some rebated strips at equal intervals along one side of the cage so that you could slide in a square of glass, entirely covering up one of the 3ft. sides; this would not obscure the birds, yet would prevent wind or draught blowing through the cage. (1) Alter cage as above, do not put in more than three pairs, and hang up half a dozen rush nests. A pair each of Zebra and Bib Finches and Silverbills would be good birds to commence with. For variety you could add a pair of Avadavats, these are small and pretty, and if they did not attempt to breed would not interfere with the others. (2) Alter cage as above, put up as many rush nests as you can without blocking up cage too much, and put in not more than eighteen small birds, such as Gouldian, Bib, Zebra, Longtail Grass, Grey Singing and Alario Finches, Avadavats, Grey, Gold-breasted, Orange-cheek and St. Helena Waxbills, Silverbills, Bengalese and Bronze Mannikins. Do not use any straight perches, put in only twiggly branches. Recently a series (in six parts, I think), "Keeping and Breeding Seed-eaters in Cages," appeared in CAGE BIRDS. The Editor would send you the parts if you have not got them.

POST MORTEMES.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

EVAN T. EVANS.—The maw seed was a fair sample, and had no connection with the discoloration observed, which was the result of rapid changes in decomposition. The cause of death was congestion of the lungs following on debility and contributed to by the warm weather.

EDINBURGH C.B.S.—Sept. 15, Cairn's Memorial Hall, Gorgie Road, 8. Financial report of F.F. show and other important business; classification for October show; unsold tickets and raffles for F.F. show to be in sec.'s hands meeting night.—J. C. Charlton.

YORK C.B.S.—Sept. 14, All Saints' Schoolroom, 8. Lecture on the Norwich Canary, by Mr. A. Humphreys.—V. G. F. Zimmerman.

G. DAKIN.—Ptomaine poisoning, due to the ingestion of poisonous products generated in the food; a common cause of trouble in the warm weather. Feed a little sparingly for a time, lessen quantity of egg food, and prepare same fresh at each feed. Give a saline aperient in the drinking water occasionally to prevent further loss.

JAS. CRAIG.—Septic fever, the serious import of which I suppose you will understand. You had better destroy remaining birds, for they are sure to die, thoroughly disinfect, and give up bird-keeping for at least three months until the infection dies out.

E. D. BLACKER.—Hepatitis, inflammation of the liver, probably caused by irritant or poisonous matter taken in with the food, or it may be of specific origin; in any case isolate affected birds from healthy, as if due to the latter case the excretions become a medium of contagion. Examine closely the seed, and if in doubt get a fresh supply. Give daily for a fortnight a few grains of sulphate of soda in the drinking water.

MRS. R. PETTER.—Congestion of the liver with traces of fatty degeneration. It is evident that your birds receive a too varied and plentiful supply of food. Try a more restricted diet in future, and allow a liberal supply of green food.

GENERAL.

Absolutely everything required by catchers in stock, and all guaranteed brand new goods; send stamp for full printed list, which also gives hints on net making. Practically every professional catcher in the Kingdom uses my articles, and I guarantee every purchaser fullest satisfaction or return his money in full. During the term of the war many people will probably have spare time; to what better use can they put it than to have some real good sport in bird catching, and at same time augment their income by disposing of their surplus catches, but to insure this they must have serviceable articles made by a man who thoroughly understands what is required for successful catching. Every article sent out by me is guaranteed to have been properly tested and exactly same quality as supplied to my own catchers. (1777)
